War Summary of The Latest Events

In default of news of importance there is again much speculation in despatches from the front concerning the distribution of the enemy's forces. Reuter's correspondent, who is always closely in touch with the British Intelligence Service, says that on the active part of the Western front, between Zonnebeke, near Ypres and Noyon, on the Oise, the enemy has sixty-four divisions now in line, while his reserves have been withdrawn considerably to the rear. Mr. Russell, who writes thus guardedly, undoubtedly intends his readers to infer that the German reserves are in positions whence they can be moved quickly to sectors of the battle line that have been inactive hitherto. From French Army Headquarters another correspondent sends a statement that of two hundred and ten German divisions on the Western front, at least one-half are being massed and organized behind the lines for attack. He, too, states that between Ypres and Noyon, on a front of one hundred and thirty-two miles, sixty-four enemy divisions are concentrated. If one hundred and five are out of the line and sixty-four are in the line between Ypres and Noyon, there are only forty-one German divisions in line on the entire three hundred and eighty-one miles between Noyon and the Swiss border, or slightly less than a thousand infantry soldiers per mile of front. If the Allies had a big reserve army to devote to the task, the moment would appear to be propitious for a swift offensive stroke in Lorraine.

The German leaders, however, are doubtless well advised by their aerial scouts concerning the location of the bulk of the Allied reserves. The preparations now going on point to the launching of the principal German attack on the Arras-Lens-Bethune front and it is probably behind this central sector that the reserves of Gen. Foch are most thickly posted. There will almost certainly be a heavy supplementary attack south of the Avre River, where the French have the support of a very considerable body of American troops. The Canadian Cavalry Brigade, which won undying fame on this sector in the battles around Moreuil, was drawn out of the line some time ago for reorganization, and is probably now somewhere north of the Somme in support.

The French bulletin again places emphasis on the violent artillery activity in the region south of the Avre particularly near Hailles and in the Senecat Wood. At Hailles the Germans are a little less than eight miles southeast of Amiens, and the Paris-Amiens railway, which they are extremely anxious to put out of business as a preliminary measure to a general attack, is less than three miles behind the French front.

Sir Douglas Haig's night report tells of successful raids at various points on the Arras sector, and particularly midway between Arras and Albert, at Hebuterne. Heavy casualties were inflicted on the enemy in these raids, and some prisoners were captured.

The British expedition en route to Mosul is advancing on a wide front. While the main body continues its march along the Bagdad-Mosul road, some seventy-five miles east of the Tigris, mounted troops are advancing along the river, and have captured Fatha without a fight. The wags of the cavalry wessies will doubtless inform the man who "may be stupid, but can't see it, you know," that Fatha is a wise old bird, and knows when to up hands. The lack of serious resistance on the part of the Turks seems to indicate shortage of munitions. They are good fighting men, and the present retreat cannot be much to their liking.

There may soon be a Bohemian front. The Czechs, who are deeply dissatisfied with the new pact entered into by the two Emperors, regarding it as an instrument for the promotion of Pan-German projects, have been rioting in the towns and plundering the country estates of German landlords. The result has been the proclamation of martial law in Bohemia, and a threat to restore order by the rough-and-ready method of drum-head court-martial. An official note issued by the Austrian Government says that "certain events which were a danger to the safety of the State and presented even a character

Wide Tire By-Law

Summary of County By- Law relating to width of tires on vehicles, coming into force October 1st, 1918.

It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to drive or propel any vehicle the weight of which, with or without a load, is more than 2500 lbs., 3500 lbs., 4500 lbs., including in each case the vehicle (the onus of proof of the weight shall be upon such owner or driver) over the said county gravel or macadamized roads,
or any part thereof, unless said vehicle has tires of the width of not less than two inches in cases of loads more than 3500 lbs., and not less than three inches in case of loads more than 3500 lbs., and not less than four inches in case of loads more than 4500 pounds.

For any wilful violation of this
By-law a fine not exceeding $20.00 and costs may be imposed upon the owner or driver of such vehicle upon summary conviction before any Justice of Peace or Police Magistrate, and in default of payment of said
fine and costs the same may be enforced by distress against the vehicle or any other property belonging to said owner or driver.

There may be soon be a Bohemian front. The Czechs, who are deeply dissatisfied with the new pact entered into by the two Emperors, regarding it as an instrument for the promotion of Pan-German projects, have been rioting in the towns and plundering the country estates of German landlords. The result has been the proclamation of martial law in Bohemia, and a threat to restore order by the rough-and-ready method of drum-head court-martial. An official note issued by the Austrian Government says that "certain events which were a danger to the safety of the State and presented even a character of high treason," took place in Bohemia recently and led to repressive measures. The delegates from the Southern Slav regions who have been visiting their Czech kinsmen have apparently stirred them up.

The American bulletin tells of the launching of a sudden and heavy gas attack against the Germans northwest of Toul. Serious losses are believed to have been inflicted on the enemy.

The Italians continue their raids into the Austrian lines on the Trentino front. To the west of the Upper Piave they struck at an enemy outpost, and destroyed not only most of its garrison, but the supports which came up to its assistance. Fifty-three prisoners were brought back.
Raids like this, and the vigorous measures taken to repel Austrian raiders who seek to penetrate the Italian positions, prove that the Italian army has recovered the keenness that was so marked in its operations before the disaster of Capor-etta.

The development of aerial warfare is most marked. A British despatch states that in recent fighting a brigade of the Royal Flying Corp brought down twenty-one enemy machines without sustaining any losses of its own. This is a remarkable record, but there is undoubtedly great disparity all the time between the enemy losses and those of the Allies. It may be that the shortage of trained aviators compels the Germans to send up partially trained men who fall victims to the superior skill and enterprise of their opponents. From Paris comes a report that the enemy are about to put into use a new super-Gotha bombing plane with four motors of 300 horsepower each and a carrying capacity of nine passengers, and two tons of projectiles. One form of bomb intended to be dropped by this giant plane weighs a ton, and three-quarters of its weight consists of explosives. A bomb of that sort would have far greater destructive power than any artillery projectile in use on the battlefield.

TOWN COUNCIL

Council Chamber,
May 20th, 1918.

Council met in regular session on Monday evening, Mayor J. E. Robinson presiding.

Present—Reeve Graham and Councillors Steacy, Spencer, Boyes, Stevens, Lowry.

The minutes of the last regular meeting were read and confirmed.

Reeve Graham reported in reference to an account from the Napanee Iron Works, amounting to $31.35. He recommended payment of $6.25 and suggested that the clerk make out a statement of the balance and forward same to Mr. Wright, engineer, Kingston, who ordered the same in connection with a pump used at the Disposal Works.

He also reported that the collector of taxes had handed him a statement of taxes remaining uncollected amounting to $2554.74, but since then the collector had received about $1600.00 of taxes.

Report adopted.
Coun. MacGregor entered and took his seat at the Board.

Mr. Fred Haggerty addressed the council in reference to the town purchasing a gasoline engine and mixer. The engine and outfit could not be replaced for $450, and Mr. Haggerty offered it to the town for $150.00. The engine is from six to eight horse power.

Referred to the Town Property Committee to report at next meeting.

A By-Law regulating the width of tires upon vehicles using the streets of Napanee was given its several readings and finally passed.

This By-Law in full will be found on page one of this issue.

A By-Law was passed providing for the collection of a poll tax in the Town of Napanee. Every male inhabitant between the ages of 21 and 60 years not appearing on the tax roll is liable for this tax.

Coun. MacGregor brought to the notice of the council the absence of any public demonstration towards our boys returning from the front. Napanee has been very lax in this matter when compared to what other towns and cities are doing. The following committee was appointed to deal with this question: Mayer Robinson, Reeve Graham and Councillors Boyes and MacGregor.

Moved by Councillor MacGregor, seconded by Councillor Spencer, that a committee be appointed to interview the business men of Napanee concerning the advisability of having a half holiday once a week during the month of June, and a whole holiday during the months of July and August, and then a half holiday during the month of September. These holidays are for the purpose of assisting in the greater production scheme. Reeve Graham and Councillors Boyes and MacGregor were appointed a committee.

DENBIGH.

Mrs. Harriet Rodger left for North Bay where she intends to make an extended visit with relatives.

Oscar Kaestner had the good luck to catch five Bears in his traps this spring already. Quite a number of other valuable fur bearing animals were caught in this vicinity last winter.

Mr. R. M. Reid, of Sharbot Lake, I.P.S., paid one of his official visits this week.

Eugene Mieske, of Caldwell Station, spent a few days here visiting his parents.

E. W. Petzold has added to his Real Estate by purchasing a two hundred acre farm within two miles of this village.

Miss Mary Magdalena Slater, daugh- ter of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Slater, of Slate Falls, and Mr. George David Green were united in marriage on the 3rd, inst., at the Lutheran Parson- age, by Rev. C. F. Christiansen.

Our farmers are still very busy with their spring seeding and planting. About all the farmers sons who were first exempted from Military Service by the local Tribunals have now also been called out; and the scarcity of farm help has been increased and probably some farmers will not be able to put in as much spring seeding and plant- ing as they had intended.

The Red Cross Society

The Society is indebted to the "Ready Helpers of Trinity church" for a splendid donation of supplies—the result of their winter's work, and to a friend for $5.00.

Miss Hattie Wartman and Miss Gladys Hatton have again been play- ing at the Strand giving us their financial gain, for which we are most grateful.

The Domville Woman's Institute has made a splendid record in a knitting contest by which 708 pairs of socks were collected. The winner of the contest was a young girl, who knit 83 pairs in 78 days.

We again invite all to the Hall on Saturday, to help with the supplies partly ready for shipment.

John H. Mosier, attorney and oil man of Muskogee, Okla., was in Kansas City recently with a new Indian story. An Indian soldier, home on a furlough, was walking down the main street at Muskogee when a white man who knew him stopped him and said:

"Well, John, I see you have become a soldier."

"Yes, me soldier," replied the Indian.

"How do you like being a soldier, John?"

"No like-um."

"What's the matter?"

"Too much salute—not enough shoot."

"Of course you know what you are fighting for, John?"

"Yes, me know," answered the Indian.

"Well, what are you fighting for,
 John?"

"Make whole damn world Democratic party," answered the Indian.—

holding their new positions strong Monday, and more than four hundred prisoners were sent back to cages. Again the Australians have evidenced, in the face of great obstacles, that indomitable spirit which has won for them in such struggles in the past. These men stormed their way into Ville-sur-Ancre Sunday morning, back marshes, into whose foul waters the tank waist-deep at times.

"The attack began at two o'clock in the morning, while the men were still hanging over the sluggish waters of the Ancre. At 11 o'clock the Australians surged forward against the spur of high ground west of Morlancourt, and by a lightning stroke wrenched this elevation from the enemy. From this rise the British were then able to look down the ruins of Ville-sur-Ancre. In a region of Morlancourt the ground was not so bad, but farther north was vile. The men sank to their knees in the slimy clinging mud, they pushed on, and often they struck sheets of water through which they had to wade up to their hips while their feet were clutched by morass beneath. They were protected in part by a creeping barrage from the British artillery, and behind a screen of breaking steel they worked forward determinedly.

"Just northeast of Morlancourt a hill which the Germans had mined heavily with machine guns, from this elevation the enemy poured a steady stream of bullets across the mist-shrouded marshlands in attempt to stem the onrushing Australians. It was desperate work, there was no hesitation on the part of the assaulting troops.

"The Australians rushed the fence in the face of a heavy fire; bombed the Germans out at all quarters, standing on the bank of road and hurling scores of explosives down among the struggling masses of grey coats.

"The fighting in the village of Ville-sur-Ancre was intense. Australians battered their way forward by sheer force, engaging the enemy at close quarters with rifles and bayonets. There was no stopping them and the Australians kept on till they had stormed their way to further side. The streets were strewn with enemy dead when the victors had been completed and a stream of prisoners was flowing back to rear."

Submerging a Submarine.
A submarine submerges by admitting water to various tanks, making so heavy that it will not float. When it desires to rise powerful electric pumps empty these cylinders. Breathable air while submerged is insured by many cylinders containing compressed pure air or oxygen. In the best submarines there is machinery to purify breathed air, the carbonic gas being absorbed from it by potash and the purified air being cooled and reoxygenated.

Making Salt.
Great improvements have been made in the methods of making high grade salt both by the grainer and vacuum pan processes. The mechanical grainers in which the brine enters the pan and is not touched by human hands till it is almost ready for shipment marvels of ingenuity. Fine table salt is now made almost exclusively by vacuum pan processes. These evaporators have so greatly reduced the cost of making fine salt that the time methods long ago passed into history.

MANY INNOCENT VICTIMS.

Many Civilians Were Killed In the Latest Air Raid.

LONDON, May 21. — More deaths and injuries to innocent inhabitants of London were caused in the German air raid Sunday night than in any raid this year, except that of January 28, when 58 persons were killed and 173 injured.

The total killed Sunday night in the London area was 37 and the total injured 155.

Six persons were injured in the provinces. The casualties are divided as follows:

London and the Metropolitan Police District: Killed—Men, 17; women, 14; children, 6; total 37.

Injured—Men, 83; women, 49; children, 23; total, 155.

Provinces—Injured, men, 2; women, 3; children, 1; total, 6.

Considerable damage to property has been reported.

This was the sixth raid of the year, the last one having been made on March 7. The provinces got off lightly, as usual, virtually all the bombs dropped outside of London having fallen into open places. In fact, it appeared as though the raiders, on being foiled in their attempt to reach London, got rid of their bombs in spots where it was impossible to do serious damage. This, however, could not have been known by them, as they were flying at a great height.

Spectators had a splendid view of an aerial fight which resulted fatally to one of the raiders. His machine fell in flames to the accompaniment of cheers of the watchers.

A number of bombs fell in open places in London, some of them near a hospital, which was seemingly protected by Providence as the helpless inmates prayed. Near this hospital the bombs fell in a semi-circle, landing in the streets and shattering windows near by. Passers-by saw the nurses at the hospital comforting patients, while others were leading in prayer and singing. The windows had been blown out, and the people near by could plainly hear the chorus singing "Praise God From Whom all Blessings Flow."

The Whitsuntide holidays probably were responsible for the safety of scores of girls housed in dormitories recently constructed by a large department store. Many of them were apprentices, brought from nearby towns, who went home for the holidays. A bomb destroyed the two upper floors of the building, which is half a block long. The main room of the floor below was damaged, but the few girls who took refuge in the basement when the first alarm was given were uninjured, except for one who was wounded slightly.

Death of Gen. Korniloff Is Again Announced.

MOSCOW, May 18. — Gen. Korniloff, the former Russian commander-in-chief, has been killed in a battle with the Soviet troops near Yekaterinodar. His army of 10,000 men has been defeated and is retreating.

The belief is expressed in Government circles that this ends armed opposition to the Bolsheviki in the south, as the remaining rebel chief, Filimonoff, is a small menace with his little army of 2,000 men. The reported revival of the Kaledines movement, the first step of which was the capture of the city of Novo Tcherkassk, capital of the territory of the Don Cossacks, failed. The Soviet troops regained the city on the day after the rebels had taken it and scattered armed bands in the city.

IRISH PLOT IS CRUSHED

Sinn Feiners Engaged in Intrigue With Enemy.

Authorities Have Rounded Up 500 Rebels In Ireland — Nationalists Find Themselves In an Embarrassing Position and Have Called Emergency Meeting to Discuss the Serious Situation.

LONDON, May 21. — The Government has adopted the policy of the iron hand in dealing with sedition in Ireland. All the leaders of the Sinn Fein Society who were implicated in the plot with Germany have been arrested by a swift, comprehensive, drag-net drawn by the police and soldiers during Friday night and the early hours of Saturday morning. The movement was apparently a complete surprise, and most of those arrested were quickly and quietly placed aboard ships.

The dragnet swept all over the country, and there was no possibility of resistance. The majority of those arrested were taken from their homes while abed, and only a few scuffles and a little revolver-play took place. According to latest reports 500 arrests were made.

Documents of great importance in connection with the conspiracy have fallen into the hands of the Government through the arrest by coast guards of a man with certain evidence upon him.

John Dillon, head of the Irish Nationalists, has summoned a special meeting of the Irish party to discuss the situation.

The proclamation by the new Viceroy states that the arrests were made because a plot with Germany was being fostered. This gives the Government ground for justification. The Sinn Fein movement has been for a long time conducted in defiance of all civil laws and war prohibitions, but the Sinn Fein leaders, except in the case of oratorical outbursts, have not identified themselves with the Germans, and so long as the Sinn Fein appeared to be a purely Irish movement a considerable section of the English people have been disposed to think that the Government might turn a blind eye toward it, and trust to the soldier elements in Ireland to maintain a balance.

The prisoners rounded up Saturday include De Valera, who was the oratorical soul of the Sinn Fein; Arthur Griffith, who through his newspaper, organized the society fourteen years ago; Countess Markievicz, who figured dramatically in the Easter insurrection in 1916; the small group of Sinn Feiners who recently won their Parliamentary election from the Nationalists and refused to take their seats at Westminster, with various leaders of the local branches. A large proportion of those arrested figured in the Easter rising and were afterward pardoned by Premier Asquith's Government.

The general interpretation of the Government's new plans read from the Viceroy's proclamation is that conscription will be sidetracked for a time, while a scheme for voluntary enlistment is tried.

The latest development places the Nationalist party in an embarrassing position. John Dillon and his followers have withdrawn from Parliament and joined the Sinn Feiners and the Church in a strike against conscription. If the Sinn Fein is proved to be in conspiracy with the Germans, the Nationalists must drop their new alliance, because the

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, May 21.—With receipts of 4058 cattle on the Union Stock Yards market yesterday and a strong and insistent demand for the better class of butcher steers and their new positions strongly today, and more than four hundred men were sent back to the ships. Again the Australians have been in the face of great odds, that indomitable spirit which won for them in such hard battles in the past. These men made their way into Ville-sur-Sunday morning across the water, into whose foul waters they waded deep at times. The attack began at two o'clock the morning, while the mists were still hanging over the slugs of water of the Ancre. At that time the Australians surged forward into the spur of high ground west of Morlancourt, and by a lightning stroke wrenched this elevation from the enemy. From this rise the British were then able to look down on the ruins of Ville-sur-Ancre. In the town of Morlancourt the ground was not so bad, but farther north it was a vile. The men sank to their knees in the slimy clinging mud as they pushed on, and often they struck their feet through which they waded up to their hips while their feet were clutched by the mud beneath. They were protected in part by a creeping barrage from British artillery, and behind this screen of breaking steel they worked forward determinedly. Just northeast of Morlancourt is a hill which the Germans had manured heavily with machine guns, and in this elevation the enemy pumped a steady stream of bullets across the mist-shrouded marshlands in an attempt to stem the onrushing Australians. It was desperate work, but there was no hesitation on the part of the assaulting troops. The Australians rushed the defence in the face of a heavy fire and killed the Germans out at close quarters, standing on the bank of a river and hurling scores of explosives among the struggling masses of their coats. The fighting in the village of Ville-sur-Ancre was intense. The Australians battered their way forward by sheer force, engaging the enemy at close quarters with rifles and bayonets. There was no stopping them and the Australians kept on until they had stormed their way to the other side. The streets were strewn with enemy dead when the victory had been completed and a stream of prisoners was flowing back to the rear.

Submerging a Submarine.
A submarine submerges by admitting water to various tanks, making it heavy that it will not float. When desired to rise powerful electric pumps empty these cylinders. Breathing air while submerged is insured by many cylinders containing compressed pure air or oxygen. In the latest submarines there is machinery to supply breathed air, the carbonic acid being absorbed from it by potash. The purified air being cooled and oxygenated.

Making Salt.
Great improvements have been made in the methods of making high grade salt both by the grainer and vacuum pan processes. The mechanical grainers in which the brine enters the plant is not touched by human hands until it is almost ready for shipment and reveals of ingenuity. Fine table salt is now made almost exclusively by vacuum pan processes. These evaporators have so greatly reduced the cost of making fine salt that the old methods long ago passed into history.

The death of Gen. L. G. Korniloff has been reported many times since the war began. A London despatch, dated April 24th, said that on April 17th Gen. Korniloff's detachment had been routed near Yekaterinodar. The despatch added that, according to prisoners, Gen. Korniloff was wounded seriously and later died. On May 5th, a despatch was received from Peking stating that reports to newspapers at Harbin said that Gen. Korniloff had been killed. It is probable that the fight at Yekaterinodar mentioned in the above despatch is the one reported from London on April 24th.

War Treaty Abrogated.

LONDON, May 21.—The war treaty between France, Italy, Britain and Russia has been abrogated and replaced by a new treaty, according to the Manchester Guardian. The old treaty embodied the terms upon which Italy entered the war, and the Guardian assumes that it is greatly modified by the new convention. This was the treaty which was published by the Bolshevik Government in Russia on Jan. 26, 1918.

Leon Trotsky, who in January was the Bolshevik Foreign Minister, published sensational secret treaties and documents from the files of the Russian Foreign Office, the one referred to in the above despatch was signed by Sir E. Grey, British Minister for Foreign Affairs, and the Italian, French and Russian Ambassadors in London. It set forth in detail the territorial concessions demanded by Italy before that country entered the war against the Central Powers.

Emperor Charles at Sofia.

SOFIA, May 21.—Emperor Charles of Austria, accompanied by Empress Zita and a number of dignitaries of the Austrian court, arrived here on Friday. They were met at the station by Crown Prince Boris and Prince Cyril, Emperor Ferdinand being indisposed.

All the Ministers of State and numerous generals were in the welcoming party. There was a procession to the palace, and afterward a formal dinner and reception.

Emperor Charles, the Empress and a number of the leading statesmen of the Austrian court left Vienna on Thursday for a visit to Sofia and Constantinople.

Government's new plans read from the Viceroy's proclamation is that conscription will be sidetracked for a time, while a scheme for voluntary enlistment is tried.

The latest development places the Nationalist party in an embarrassing position. John Dillon and his followers have withdrawn from Parliament and joined the Sinn Feiners and the Church in a strike against conscription. If the Sinn Fein is proved to be in conspiracy with the Germans, the Nationalists must drop their new alliance, because the Nationalists never have been pro-Germans, nor even anti-British, but only Home Rulers.

Among the prominent Sinn Feiners arrested were: Prof. Edward De Valera, president of the Sinn Fein; Arthur Griffith, founder of the Sinn Fein; Countess Markievicz, Dr. Thos. Dillon, William Cosgrave, Sinn Fein M.P. for Kilkenny; Dr. Richard Hayes, Darrell Figgis, Thomas Hunter, Jos. McCraith, Patrick O'Keefe, H. Mellows, Jos. McGuinness, Sinn Fein member of Parliament for the southern division of County Longford; J. McGrath, Walter Scoles, John M. Centee, a Belfast Sinn Feiner, who was sentenced to death in connection with events at Dundalk during the rebellion of 1916, and Denis McCullough, another Sinn Feiner.

The arrest of the Sinn Fein leaders was made by detectives acting in cooperation with the military, while in the provinces they were carried out by the Royal Irish Constabulary.

Turks In Persia.

MOSCOW, May 11.—Turkish regulars and Kurds, advancing in Persia, have occupied Soujbulak and Ushnu, south of Lake Urmia, according to newspaper despatches from Tiflis.

A despatch from Tabriz says that the Turkish objective is Enzeli, which will become the central base from which the British will be menaced in Mesopotamia.

Recent despatches from the Mesopotamian front have reported a British advance up the Tigris river to Kirkuk, after considerable fighting with the Turks. Enzeli, which lies to the eastward of Kirkuk, may indicate an attempt by the Turks to attack the British line of communications along the Tigris river.

German Regiments Mutiny.

MOSCOW, May 21.—Mutiny is reported among German regiments at Wesenberg, Esthonia. Several officers have been killed, it is said.

The German high command immediately despatched trustworthy troops to Wesenberg and arrested about 200 of the mutineers. Ten of them were condemned to death. Another mutiny occurred in a German regiment at Drinsk, which was supported by prisoners who had returned from the interior of Russia.

Food Crisis Past.

PARIS, May 21.—Victor Boret, the French Food Minister, was asked by the Associated Press yesterday what effect the first three meatless days terminating Friday had upon the situation in France. He replied:

"It means that our and your brave boys at the front will henceforth receive all the meat necessary to strengthen them for the arduous task of beating the Germans. Complete returns have not yet been received, but judging from the figures sent in from the Paris, Seine and outlying districts, I can say that the threatening crisis has been safely passed."

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, May 21.—With receipts of 4058 cattle on the Union Stock Yards market yesterday and a strong and insistent demand for the better class of butcher steers and heifers, the market for this class of cattle was decidedly strong.

For cattle weighing from 1050 pounds and upwards the market was probably from 15c to 25c per cwt. higher. Light weight cattle, weighing less than 900 lbs., sold at probably from 10c to 25c lower.

The hog trade was weaker, except for the contract animals, which sold at 21c fed and watered; but for the others from $20.60 up was the price generally paid, and packers are quoting considerably lower prices for the balance of the week.

U. S. Will Send All Men Needed.

NEW YORK, May 21.—President Wilson, who opened the Red Cross drive for a second $100,000,000 war fund at the Metropolitan Opera House Saturday night with a stirring appeal for generous contributions, said incidentally that the United States will not be diverted from its purpose of winning the war by insincere approaches on the subject of peace.

"I can say with a clear conscience, that I have tested those intentions and have found them insincere. I now recognize them for what they are: an opportunity to have a free hand, particularly in the East, to carry out purposes of conquest and exploitation. Every proposal with regard to accommodation in the West involves a reservation in regard to the East. I intend to stand by Russia as well as France."

He was cheered when he said that the United States intended to stand by Russia as well as France.

Once Dishonored But Won Glory

"MONEY lost, little lost; honor lost, much lost; pluck lost, all lost," is an old English saying, and it is no doubt partly due to the fact that the Anglo-Saxon race respects pluck almost above every other quality that Great Britain is what she is. No story finds such a swift response in our hearts as the story of a man refusing to lose his courage and battling with adverse fortune, finally win out. Such was the story of Lt.-Col. Elkington, who lost his rank in the early days of the war, but re-enlisted as a private in the French Foreign Legion, distinguished himself and was eventually restored to his original rank in the British army. It is a story that thrilled England. Now there is another story very much like that of Lt.-Col. Elkington, of a commanding officer cashiered for what was considered an error of judgment or a lack of courage, who re-enlisted as a private, fought for nearly three years, and so distinguished himself that he too has been given back his original rank with his previous seniority.

The name of this second hero is Lt.-Col. Edward Parker England. He went overseas among the first of the British expeditionary forces, and the disgrace which befell him occurred in the course of the retreat from Mons. He was in command of an ammunition column, and for five days and five nights is said to have had but an hour of sleep. His column was plodding along one black night when a staff officer galloped past and said, "If you don't get a hustle on you will be surrounded." Thinking to save the column, Col. England ordered that some ammunition cases should be thrown away in order that better speed might be made. It is said that more ammunition was abandoned than he had intended. In any event the ammunition cases were found by some troops that were behind him, and the matter was reported. Although Col. England had got his column through safely, he was court-martialed, and it was decided that he had made such a grievous blunder that he could not be again entrusted with a British battalion. He was dropped from the army, and vanished from the ken of his friends.

The disgrace was a severe blow to Col. England, who had but lately recovered from a severe attack of illness, brought about by concussion of the brain, and he remained in hospital for some time. When he was able to leave he decided that a long sea voyage was what he needed, and so departed for South Africa. After arriving in the fall of 1915, ex-Col. England concluded that he could still do his bit, and so under his own name he enlisted as a scout in the South African Horse. He went through a twelve months' campaign in East Africa until the horses gave out and the troopers were dismounted. After that he was transferred to France and became attached to the Devons, with whom he saw some heavy fighting. He was in the "show" at Passchendaele, and got his "blighty touch" in a night raid, a severe wound in the chest, and an arm plentifully sprinkled with shrapnel. He was invalided home, and

A POET UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

Edmund Leamy Sent Verse From East Africa.

Those who happen to read the African poems of Edmund Leamy may be interested in knowing something of the origin of these verses, which tell so much of the jungle life. In their origin they are perhaps more interesting than any verse being produced at the present time.

Early in 1915 Leamy, who had been unable to do much in a literary way, went out to British East Africa as the employe of a business concern and there joined the military forces then being organized. There was soon an expedition under way against the German African regiments and Leamy saw some sharp fighting.

Along the jungle trails and on the heights Leamy saw much beauty and some humor in the African scenes between fights. When there was a chance in camp and during night watches he would write his verses, sometimes with the snip of bullets going through the leaves overhead.

It was one thing to write them and another thing to get them out of Africa to New York, where they might have a market value. The poems were usually written legibly, in a small hand with lead pencil, on the sheets of his note book.

Sometimes the military mail was carried by native runners to the nearest railway point, which might be a good way off. Thence it was taken to the coast, probably to Mombasa, where Leamy's lead pencil scrips would wait for the very casual war time steamship which might carry them to Marseilles or Brindisi on their long journey. Various censors had to read them or were supposed to and the usual time of transportation was about four months.

About Walking Sticks.

The United Kingdom has long taken the lead in the manufacture of walking sticks and a large proportion of the output was made of raw material grown in the British Isles, such as ash, chestnut, oak and similar woods. The importation of finished sticks has always been small, but before the war a considerable amount of raw or partly finished material was imported, such as malacca canes, ebony, wangees, roof bamboo, nilgherri, etc. Cherry sticks and what is known as "Congo" wood were formerly imported from Germany and Austria, where they are grown. For a time after the outbreak of war the stocks on hand met the demand, but gradually the trade has become more dependent upon home-grown goods, and consequently a greatly increased demand for domestic raw material has arisen. The military vogue has also had great effect on the style of walking sticks, and there has been a large demand during the last two or three years for sticks and canes for military use. As regards prices, it has been found that both labor and material have had a steady upward tendency since the war began. Some canes and sticks which were largely used have increased 100 per cent in cost, and certain of the better kinds are now practically unobtainable. Generally speaking, it may be said that an approximate advance of 25 per cent. in price has taken place on the lower grade goods and probably 30 to 40 per cent. on the higher qualities. Increasing difficulty is also being experienced by British manufacturers in obtaining sufficient supplies of metal fittings, materials for umbrella frames and textile materials for umbrella covers.

THE SUGAR FAMINE.

England Is Now Shaken

By Serious Controversy

Between Two Old Rivals

IT is not often the fortune of a newspaperman to gain such fame as Col. Repington, and the affair of the London Post has attracted attention in all parts of the world, even in the critical days of a great war. Col. Repington, who wrote the article complained of, and Mr. H. A. Gwynne, the editor of the Post, who after the censor had objected to the article, made some slight changes and published it, have been fined $500, and have thus become sufficiently familiar with the Defence of the Realm Act to speak of it as Dora. Nevertheless, we are likely to hear more from the Post, its editor and its military critic. The Post is not to be confounded with such a newspaper as the News or the Chronicle. It is a fine old Tory newspaper, and even more than the Times, has been considered the organ of the aristocracy of the British Isles. It cannot be suspected of pacifism; it cannot be accused of lack of determination to fight the war through to the end. Its course has no doubt been dictated by the strongest patriotism, and while it may have violated a law of the land, its influence has not been impaired on that account.

What Col. Repington told the British public through the Post was that for the first time in the history of the war a British force on the Western front had been placed under the command of a commander who was not British. In the case of Salonica, of course, British troops have been operating or failing to operate under a French general for a long time. In the earlier days of the war Joffre was generalissimo, and Sir John French was under him. But Gen. Haig has not been under any other general; nor is he now, but the Versailles Conference determined upon the policy of having available a certain number of British troops, as well as French troops, to be moved to any part of the front, any part of the world, where the Allied War Council thought fit to move them. Gen. Robertson objected to this arrangement, and while Col. Repington is an admirer of Gen. Robertson, it is not plain, from cabled despatches, that he objected to the creation of this special body of troops. His offense was that he told the world of one of the decisions at the conference, and thus brought himself into the clutches of the law. Of course, there is more behind than meets the eye or is likely to meet it in the immediate future.

Perhaps it is safe to say that the important thing behind it is that Lord Northcliffe and Col. Repington have conflicting ideas as to how the war should be conducted, that Lord Northcliffe has now come to the conclusion that Lloyd George is doing well, whereas Repington never had the opinion, declared it more than once when he was the expert on the Times, and left the Times after Northcliffe and Lloyd George had come to an agreement. It is a fair assumption that until lately Col. Repington directed the military policy of the Times. It was Repington who took his courage in his hands in the early days of the war and exposed the

READY TO EXPLOIT CANADA.

Kaiser Planned to Give British Dominion Aways Even In 1912.

The following sensational extracts, are from a brochure, the author of which is said to be Herr August Thyssen, a relative of the well-known German millionaire coal and iron master:—

"When the Hohenzollerns wanted to get the support of the commercial class for their war plans, they put their ideas before us as a business proposition. Business and commercial men were asked to support the Hohenzollern war policy on the ground that it would pay them to do so. Let me frankly confess that I am one of those men who were led to agree. In 1912 the Hohenzollerns said that war had become a necessity for the preservation of the military system upon which their power depends.

"I was personally promised a free grant of 30,000 acres in Australia and a loan from the Deutsche Bank of 750,000 dollars at 3 per cent. to enable me to develop my business in Australia. Several other firms were promised special trading facilities in India, which was to be conquered by Germany—be it noted by the end of 1915.

"A syndicate was formed for the exploitation of Canada. The syndicate consisted of the heads of twelve great firms, and the working capital was fixed at $100,000,000, half of which was to be found by the German Government. These promises were not vaguely given. They were made definitely by Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg, on behalf of the Emperor, at gatherings of business men, and in many cases to manufacturers. But not only were these promises made by the Chancellor, they were confirmed by the Emperor, who, on three occasions addressed large private gatherings. The Emperor's speech was one of the most flowery orations I have heard."

Fishing Reciprocity.

An arrangement which settles long-standing fisheries questions between Canada and the United States has been reached. It will remain in force at least during the war. The new agreement, which is regarded as another evidence of how the two countries are striving to break down all barriers that stand in the way of greater production, provides for complete reciprocity of port privileges for the fishing craft of the two countries. This will not only enable an important increase in the amount of fish produced to be made by the two countries, but will do away with the irritating delays to vessels of either country in the ports of the other.

The new pact is the first fruit of the work of the International Joint Commission, consisting of Hon. Chief Justice J. D. Hazen, of New Brunswick; G. J. Desbarates, Deputy Minister of the Naval Service, at W. A. Found, Superintendent Fisheries, as Canadian members, a Hon. W. O. Redfield, Secretary Commerce; E. F. Sweet, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, and Dr. M. Smith, Commission of Fisheries as the United States members. The commission was named to consider the settlement of all outstanding fisheries questions between the two countries.

Following the return of the United States section of the Commission from public sittings on the Atlantic coast, the Secretary of Commerce, with the authority of the President under their war legislation, issued instructions to all their customs officers to allow Canadian fishing vessels to come directly from the fisheries to the United States ports.

do his bit, and so under his own name he enlisted as a scout in the South African Horse. He went through a twelve months' campaign in East Africa until the horses gave out and the troopers were dismounted. After that he was transferred to France and became attached to the Devons, with whom he saw some heavy fighting. He was in the "show" at Passchendaele, and got his "blighty touch" in a night raid, a severe wound in the chest, and an arm plentifully sprinkled with shrapnel. He was invalided home, and it was while he was lying in hospital at Nottingham that he learned that official cognizance had been taken of his conduct and that he had been restored to the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Lt.-Col. England has been soldiering for thirty-two years, according to Hayden Church, who interviewed the hero in England, and tells the story in the Detroit Free Press. He is a Lancashire man and got his commission as a lieutenant in the artillery in 1886. Ten years later he received his captaincy, his majority in 1901, and two years later was advanced to the rank he held at the time war broke out. He had been serving in India, but in August, 1914, happened to be home in England on sick leave. One can well imagine that a man in his physical condition was not fit for the terrific task that the "Old Contemptibles" had to undertake, and with this fact in mind, a civilian jury would probably not have inflicted such severe punishment upon him, for what was, at worst, an error of judgment, made in most trying circumstances. Nevertheless, Col. England does not claim that he was unfairly treated. He was a good soldier and took his medicine.

He did not enter the ranks as a private, giving his age as forty, when he was ten years older, in order to prove that the court-martial that disciplined him had made a mistake. He fought, not for his own reputation, but because he was an Englishman and a soldier. Lt.-Col. England says that if he were to resume his fighting days he would never be an officer. "As a private," he says, "I had an excellent time, lots of fun and no worries. And the boys with me—my chums in arms—were all of the best. The lads of Devon have suffered tremendous losses in this war, but they fight like demons." When asked what he intended to do when he left the service, Lt.-Col. England replied that he hoped to get a little hunting if his arm healed. While he was away serving as a trooper in South East Africa and later as a private in the Devons, his wife was working in a Devonport military hospital. She is a soldier's daughter as well as a soldier's wife, her father being Gen. Boyce Combe, C.B. As the song almost says, "There's something in the Englands after all."

Club Was Fined.

The secretary of the Cardiff Conservative Club was fined £100 recently, and the committee was censured, for failing to keep a correct record of meals supplied.

Napoleon's Joke.

Lady Rensborough, a clever Englishwoman of the last century, travelled in France soon after the downfall of Napoleon. Among the many anecdotes she tells of the fallen conqueror in a recent book giving extracts from her correspondence is this: While he was in exile on the island of Elba, a workman who was making repairs on his chateau fell from the roof and was instantly killed in the presence of Napoleon. He gazed at the lifeless figure and said: "A fall does not always kill. I have fallen farther than that."

of the better kinds are now practically unobtainable. Generally speaking, it may be said that an approximate advance of 25 per cent. in price has taken place on the lower grade goods and probably 30 to 40 per cent. on the higher qualities. Increasing difficulty is also being experienced by British manufacturers in obtaining sufficient supplies of metal fittings, materials for umbrella frames and textile materials for umbrella covers.

THE SUGAR FAMINE.

There Will Not Be Too Much Sweetness This Year.

That Canadians have revelled in a wealth of granulated sugar while in many places in the United States the people, imbued with a commendable war spirit, have gladly gone weeks without sugar in their tea and resorted to corn syrup to sweeten the food of babies, is a rumor circulating across the line which is damaging to Canada's spirit of patriotism in the eyes of many Americans. The rumor had its inception in an advertisement which appeared in a Canadian newspaper less than a month ago, and which offered 100 pounds of pure cane sugar for $8.95. This advertisement was commented upon in the United States press and placed Canadians under a false light. Throughout Canada, and in Toronto in particular, men engaged in the sugar trade regard the offer contained in the advertisement as one impossible to fulfil under present conditions. Not one of the Toronto wholesale houses had on hand at that moment one-twentieth of the supply necessary to meet immediate domestic demands, and there was not any prospect of the supply increasing as freely as might be expected. One sugar distributor has within recent weeks packed his sugar in five-pound bags instead of 100-pound bags, to meet the wishes of the wholesale trade, and paper packages containing one pound of sugar may yet have to be sent out.

The average shipment of sugar into Canada during the past three years has been 300,000 tons. Last year it was 314,000 tons, but this year the International Committee has allotted Canada 320,000 tons. Every pound of sugar which reaches Canada these days is immediately snapped up, and wholesale houses cannot serve the need of the retail merchants, whose customers have complained for months of a shortage of sugar. The trouble at present is due to the fact that the supply is not coming forward as freely as was expected, and the wholesalers have not the least idea when the supply will improve.

Canada has been living from hand to mouth so far as sugar is concerned for many months past one large retail merchant declared. He did not in the least blame the wholesaler for the cause of the clamor of his disappointed customers, but attributed it to the war conditions. This merchant's experience has been the experience of retail merchants large and small. In many districts in Ontario people have had to travel miles in search of a pound of sugar and frequently have been disappointed in their quest. Grocers have doled out their meagre supplies to regular customers, breaking open 5-pound bags, and in cases 2-pound sealed cartons, in order that their stock might go further round. It has not been an uncommon experience either for retail merchants to be without sugar for days on end. Even the large stores, which for a considerable period limited customers to one pound of sugar with grocery orders, have on occasions run out of sugar. While the situation is improving the day when the 100-pound bag of sugar will grace the cupboard of the average home is in the opinion of the dealers yet some distance off.

have conflicting ideas as to how the war should be conducted, that Lord Northcliffe has now come to the conclusion that Lloyd George is doing well, whereas Repington never had the opinion, declared it more than once when he was the expert on the Times, and left the Times after Northcliffe and Lloyd George had come to an agreement. It is a fair assumption that until lately Col. Repington directed the military policy of the Times. It was Repington who took his courage in his hands in the early days of the war and exposed the shortage of high explosive shells on the Western front. It may have been Repington, who worked under Kitchener, who inspired the Times to demand that Kitchener be made Secretary of War.

Col. Repington is probably the most respected of war critics writing in the English language. He is not a journalist who has made a specialty of military affairs. He is a soldier, and a distinguished soldier. He saw service in Afghanistan and Burma. In 1898, as a colonel, he was mentioned in despatches from the Sudan. He fought against the Boers and won his C.M.G., and was military attaché at Brussels and The Hague, and later on became attached to the Times as military correspondent. When he held this post he was also invited by the Government to edit a Military Review, an official publication, fostered by Lord Haldane. On one occasion there was a short but somewhat acrimonious debate in Parliament concerning the dual position that Col. Repington occupied. As a member of the War Office and editor of the Review he came naturally into the possession of information that other journalists were denied, and it was alleged that this gave him an unfair advantage in his role as military correspondent of the Times. At the time of the debate, however, it seemed to be generally admitted that he was an authority upon military matters. Lord Haldane said that if the best man in England was to be had for the purposes of the War Office Repington was the inevitable man.

A tribute from Haldane is not exactly something that a man would care to frame and hang over the kitchen sink. Nevertheless, apart from Haldane's affinity with Germany he did some good work at the War Office, and it is no reflection upon Repington that he approved of Haldane's scheme for army reform. Though rebuked in stinging words by the Bow Street magistrate, no doubt Col. Repington and Mr. Gwynne are easy in their conscience. The former has no doubt the idea that civilians are meddling too much in affairs that are purely military, and that Lord Northcliffe is afflicted with a disease that cost Caesar his life. The motives of a newspaper owner when he sets out to control a Government are not necessarily less open to suspicion than the motives of a contractor or promoter on a similar errand, and nothing would so quickly destroy public confidence in Lloyd George as the belief that he was under the influence of a newspaper or a thousand newspapers.

Ancient Heligoland.

Centuries ago Heligoland, the present great German naval base in the North Sea, was at least five times its present size and a place of no little importance. Like so many islands, it had a peculiar attraction for the peoples of the surrounding mainlands. They stood in awe of it, and mythology claimed it for its own. It was here that Forseti, the god of justice, had a temple, as had also, according to another tradition, the goddess Heitha, a special object of veneration among the Angles of the mainland. Later on it was the realm of the Pagan and Radbod.

Following the return of the United States section of the Commission from public sittings on the Atlantic coast, the Secretary of Commerce with the authority of the President under their war legislation, issue instructions to all their customs officers to allow Canadian fishing vessels to come directly from the fishing grounds to the United States port sell their catches there, procure a supplies and outfits and clear back to the fishing grounds, thus doing away entirely with the obstacles they previously experienced. Following this action, the Canadian Government authorized by order-in-Council under the War Measures Act, the United States fishing vessels shall be permitted to come to our ports for similar privileges without the requirement of a license. As there is a duty in Canada, such duty will have to be paid on fish sold in Canadian ports.

For Winning Battles.

It is understood that the brilliant services of the late Sir Stanley Maugham will be recognized by a substantial pecuniary grant to his widow and family. Had he lived, it is certain that the House of Commons would have made him a grant in accordance with the well established precedent.

After the South African War Lord Roberts was created an earl and given a grant of £100,000, whilst Lord Kitchener, who had, after his achievement of Omdurman, Khartoum, and Fashda, been granted £30,000 and a peerage, received a viscountcy and a grant of £50,000.

The Duke of Wellington was allowed £600,000 in addition to other grants, and the services of Lord Nelson were recognized with an annual of £2,000 per annum for three heirs—Tit-Bits.

The Strength of the Allies.

It is safe to say, quoting from a Lloyd George's recent statement, that the strength and composition of the British army is as follows: The total forces recruited in England, Scotland and Ireland are five and one half million men to which we must add a million from the Dominions. The armies of France appear to be indomitable and as elastic as ever; and the steady influx of American troops into the country has relieved the heroic people of all further anxiety as to the score of man-power. As for material resources, Great Britain and America can offer almost boundless assistance. Their countries are not invaded. Their industrial activity unimpaired, and their wealth inexhaustible.—Ian Hay (Major Ian Hay, M.C.) in the World's Work.

READY TO EXPLOIT CANADA.

Kaiser Planned to Give British Dominions Away Even In 1912.

The following sensational extracts, re from a brochure, the author of which is said to be Herr August Thyssen, a relative of the well-known German millionaire coal and iron master:—

"When the Hohenzollerns wanted to get the support of the commercial class for their war plans, they put their ideas before us as a business proposition. Business and commercial men were asked to support the Hohenzollern war policy on the ground that it would pay them to do so. Let me frankly confess that I am one of those men who were led to agree. In 1912 the Hohenzollerns said that war had become a necessity for the preservation of the military system upon which their own depends.

"I was personally promised a grant of 30,000 acres in Australia and a loan from the Deutsche Bank of 750,000 dollars at 3 per cent. to enable me to develop my business in Australia. Several other firms were promised special trading facilities in India, which was to be conquered by Germany—be it noted by the end of 1915.

"A syndicate was formed for the exploitation of Canada. The syndicate consisted of the heads of twelve great firms, and the working capital was fixed at $100,000,000, half of which was to be found by the German government. These promises were not vaguely given. They were made definitely by Herr von Bethmann-Ollweg, on behalf of the Emperor, at gatherings of business men, and in any cases to manufacturers. India's Part in War Must Win Admiration Of the Other Dominions

AS soon as the war is over, India's demand for a larger share of self-government will have to be considered. Some such political reform is generally conceded to be long overdue, and the important part she has taken in the war has greatly strengthened her claim.

Most persons do not realize what India's contribution has been almost insuperable. Her army at that time consisted of 78,000 British and 158,000 native troops. How confidently Britain relied on her loyalty is shown by the fact that practically the whole of these troops were sent to various fronts as soon as possible. India, for a time, was almost denuded of soldiers, with the exception of some British territorials in training, who were used to guard the border.

Since the struggle began she has contributed at least half a million men, most of whom have been employed in Mesopotamia, Egypt and South Africa. Many thousands have also been in France, where they did excellent service, but where the climatic conditions were found unsuitable for them.

There was much fear lest the alliance between Germany and Turkey might strain the allegiance of Britain's Mahometan subjects, but this idea proved to be entirely without foundation. The Jihad, or holy war, proclaimed by the Sultan, seems to have had about as much effect among Mahometans as the Pope's peace proposals among Christians.

Financially, also, India has done well. She has paid the cost of her own military expeditions and she has donated half a billion dollars to the general expenses of the war. In addition, her ruling chiefs have testified their devotion by munificent gifts. In view of these facts it will be hard to deny her whatever degree of self-government her people may desire.

Big Jump In Use of Sugar.

Even if Canadians are compelled by the shortage to get along with considerably less sugar than they are now eating, it may console them to know that they are still better off than were their ancestors, who got along with scarcely more than one-twentieth the amount of sugar the present generation has been accustomed to have. According to a pamphlet published by the National Bank of Commerce, the total sugar production of the world, so recently as 1840, was only 1,288,000 tons, whereas in the four years from 1914 to 1918 the average production was more than 19,000,000 tons.

Three hundred years ago, the pamphlet points out, sugar was a rare and precious luxury, reserved only for the tables of royalty, or at best of the wealthiest and most powerful classes. In those days all sugar was cane sugar, for beet sugar was not discovered until 1747. However, in the ten years from 1889 to 1899 beet sugar, thanks to intensive cultivation and great efforts to promote its production, actually constituted three-fifths of the world's supply. Since then, however, cane growth has regained primacy, and since has formed about 55 per cent. of the total.

Treaty for Bird Protection

CANADA and the United States are parties to a treaty for the protection of birds unique in the history of the world. The full text of this pact may be obtained on application to the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, along with the text and the enabling act (bill 92), passed by the Dominion Parliament on July 21, 1917. An abridgment of the text of these laws is in course of preparation, and will be issued in leaflet form for distribution by the Canadian Society for the Protection of Birds this year.

This treaty was drafted and signed after an exhaustive biological survey of the North American continent, in which the evidence of experts regarding the mission of certain species of birds in organic nature to maintain an essential check on insect life, was presented and confirmed. The alarming decrease of useful species of birds of all kinds on this continent was also noted and deplored.

The treaty provides for a perpetual close season on all migratory insectivorous and weed-seed eating birds, and for special periods of protection for vanishing species such as the Wood duck and the Elder duck. It abolishes spring shooting all over the continent and provides a close season on all migratory game birds throughout the nesting season—from March 10 to September 1st.

The Canadian enabling act is known as the Migratory Birds Convention Act. This splendid Act—which the public should be made aware of, is now operative throughout the Dominion—imposes a maximum penalty of one hundred dollars or six months' imprisonment, or both fine and imprisonment, on any person violating its provisions. It also provides for the confiscation of all guns, ammunition, vessels, vehicles and outfits of every description, that may be used in the violation of the act or even with intention to violate it.

Under the act, Dr. C. Gordon Hewitt, Dominion entomologist, has recently been appointed as Dominion consulting zoologist. The administration department, which will include game officers, invested with the powers of both a constable and justice of the peace, is in course of organization.

Excellent though its provisions are, and its administration may be, however, the act and the great treaty will be of little avail for their purpose unless the people are enlightened regarding the value of birds to man and their nests and eggs. Until this is done and the knowledge of the mission of birds in nature, and pure interest in birds for their beauty and habits and song become widespread, laws for their protection will be evaded or only half-heartedly obeyed.

The Canadian Society for the Protection of Birds exists for the purpose of disseminating this knowledge. It is a voluntary movement receiving the approval of the Ontario Government, which has assigned to it suitable headquarters at 153 University avenue, Toronto. Its object is the education of the people regarding bird life and bird service. It is the only organized and incorporated association in Canada for this purpose.

West Philadelphia, Pa.—"During the thirty years I have been married, I have been in bad health and had several attacks of nervous prostration until it seemed as if the organs in my whole body were worn out. I was finally persuaded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it made a well woman of me. I can now do all my housework and advise all ailing women to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I will guarantee they will derive great benefit from it."—Mrs. FRANK FITZGERALD, 25 N. 41st Street, West Philadelphia, Pa.

There are thousands of women everywhere in Mrs. Fitzgerald's condition, suffering from nervousness, backache, headaches, and other symptoms of a functional derangement. It was a grateful spirit for health restored which led her to write this letter so that other women may benefit from her experience and find health as she has done.

TIME MAKES CHANGES.

Descendants of "Rebels" Won Glory In France.

Three young Canadians have furnished a stirring page in Canada's illustrious war annals. The blood in their veins was "rebel" blood. They sprang from sires who, nearly a century ago, were laying the foundation for the most notable and dramatic uprising in the country's history. In 1837 William Lyon Mackenzie, Louis Joseph Papineau, and Samuel Lount rose against Britain in their battle for responsible Government. When the present war broke out their scions hastened to her defence for civilization and human liberty.

Recent British cables carried another list of gallant Canadians decorated for distinguished war service. That list included Major Samuel Kenyon Lount, who received the bar to his previously-won Military Cross. Major Lount enlisted at the outbreak of war as a private, and went overseas with the 76th Battalion. Having secured his commission he proceeded to France in a reinforcement draft, and was despatched to the fighting front. He was wounded on the Somme. On his recovery he returned to service, and has shared in every engagement in which his new battalion took part. At Vimy he won the Military Cross and his captaincy. At Passchendaele he won his bar and his majority. At present he is in a military hospital "worn out."

Major Lount is the only surviving son of the late Samuel Lount, registrar at Barrie. In that town his widowed mother and sister now live. He is also a grandnephew of Samuel Lount, one of the outstanding figures in the stirring times of 1837, who might have saved his life had he chosen to reveal the names of those who took part with him in that his-

STRUCK A WIRELESS MAST.

Aviator Jammed 400 Feet In Air—King Rewards Rescuers.

It is announced in the London Gazette that the King has awarded the Albert Medal in gold to Nicholas Rath, seaman, R.N.R., and the Albert Medal to Richard Knoulton, ordinary seaman, R.N., and George Faucett Pitts Abbott, deckhand, R.N.R. (trawler section), in recognition of their gallantry in saving life in the following circumstances:

On Sept. 14th, 1917, a seaplane collided with a Poulsen mast and remained wedged in it, the pilot (Acting Flight Commander E. A. de Ville) being rendered unconscious and thrown out of his seat on to one of the wings.

The three men above mentioned at once climbed up the mast for 100 feet, when Rath, making use of the boatswain's chair, which moves on the inside of the mast, was hoisted up by men at the foot of the mast to the place, over 300 feet from the ground, where the seaplane was fixed. He then climbed out on the plane, and held the pilot until the arrival of Knoulton and Abbott, who passed the masthead gantline out to him.

Having secured the pilot with the gantline, Rath, with the assistance of Knoulton and Abbott, lifted him from the plane to the inside of the mast and lowered him to the ground.

The three men were very well aware of the damaged and insecure condition of the mast, which was bent to an angle where the seaplane had become wedged. One of the three supports of the mast was fractured, and, so far as the men knew, the mast or seaplane might at any time have collapsed.

Famous Gainsborough.

Gainsborough's famous painting, "Blue Boy," remains in the Hearn family, Mrs. Clarkson Cowl, the eldest daughter of the late Mr. Hearn, paying $38,000 for it after a series of spirited bids at the closing night of the sale of Hearn pictures. The ballroom of the Hotel Plaza was crowded when the painting, which is said to be the original by Thomas Gainsborough, was auctioned, a score of thousand-dollar bidders dwindling to a few as Thomas E. Kirby, the auctioneer, sang out the soaring figures.

Mrs. Cowl also purchased Turner's "Fitz Alan Chapel" at a price of $20,500. The presence of high bidders added zest to the sale, and the enthusiasm of the audience rose as each masterpiece came under the auctioneer's hammer. Ninety-two old masters were represented, netting $209,975, which, added to the amount raised on the contemporary American and European paintings, brought the grand total up to $715,108, one of the biggest sales in the history of recent exhibits.

During the past year 2,500 members were enrolled, chiefly juniors, from the Yukon to Newfoundland. The awakening interest of young people in birds is promising, and the chief hope that the treaty for their protection will be faithfully observed.

But the pretensions of the multitude of "young naturalists" who apply yearly for permits to collect birds' eggs and nests and to kill rare visitors to their localities as "specimens," must be resolutely repressed, and M.L.A.'s discouraged from applying to secure these permits.

Not in one case in a thousand is the "collection" more than a passing fancy, to be thrown out in the course of time as rubbish—and Canada so much the poorer for the loss of the birds.

The truest and most beneficial knowledge of birds is obtained by use of the kodak, and by patient, intelligent observation.

British Humor.

The number of consulting physicians in England has become so reduced as a result of mobilization and overwork on the part of those not called to active duty, owing to age, etc., that invalids and those subject to everyday maladies are requested to refrain from sending for the doctor for "every little ache and pain," this privilege being permitted only in extreme cases.

"It is desired that the public in general, in order to simplify medical services, take the greatest of care possible in order to prevent carelessly contracting diseases that require long, difficult and expensive courses of treatment.

"It will be a proof of patriotism on the part of every one during the war to content themselves with the less serious complaints, such as influenza, neuralgia, headache and hysteria, these latter being easily relieved by means of a few cheery words."

Victory for Women.

How the women first heard of the victory of their cause in the House of Lords is told by the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, with the prefixed remark that it illustrates the typically British gift of "reducing all things, however wonder-working and unprecedented, to the ordinary prose of life." "The women who went to Parliament for the last stage of the bill," he says, "were addressed by the policeman on duty at the door with these words: 'Don't be afraid, ladies, you're sure to win.' They had to leave the chamber during the division and waited anxiously outside. Presently, before any of the lords had time to reach them, the door opened and the policeman beamed upon them. 'Ladies, you have won, hands down!'"

Some Puns.

Two British soldiers went into a restaurant at Salonica and asked for Turkey with Greece, according to a foolishly-inclined contemporary. The waiter said: "I'm sorry, gentlemen, but I can't Servia," whereupon the Tommies cried, "Fetch the Bosphorus!" When that gentleman arrived and heard the complaint the manager said: "Well, gentlemen, I don't want to Russia, but you cannot Roumania." And so the poor Tommies had to go away Hungary.

every engagement in which the new battalion took part. At Vimy he won the Military Cross and his captaincy. At Passchendaele he won his bar and his majority. At present he is in a military hospital "worn out."

Major Lount is the only surviving son of the late Samuel Lount, registrar at Barrie. In that town his widowed mother and sister now live. He is also a grandnephew of Samuel Lount, one of the outstanding figures in the stirring times of 1837, who might have saved his life had he chosen to reveal the names of those who took part with him in that historic rising.

Major Lount is the third link in the blood tie that binds the "rebels" of that uprising to the patriots of the great war of to-day. Major Charles Bethune Lindsey, D.S.O., son of Mr. G. G. S. Lindsey, K.C., who won his decoration on the fields of France, is the great-grandson of William Lyon Mackenzie. Major Talbot Papineau of the Princess Patricia's, who won the Military Cross, was more than once mentioned in despatches, and finally gave his life in heroic service on the battlefield, was the grandson of Louis Joseph Papineau.

It is to the glory of these young Canadians—descendants of the men of the historic yesterday who fought Britain in the cause of responsible Government—that they were among the first to spring to her defence in the cause of liberty and justice. The names of Mackenzie, Papineau and Lount loom large in the history of the past. The names of their young descendants add lustre to the new pages being written in the stressful present.

Soldiers Voted Union.

"The result of the elections in Canada has given the greatest satisfaction, and has created the greatest enthusiasm amongst all ranks of the corps," according to Lt.-Gen. A. W. Currie, officer commanding the Canadian Corps in France, in a letter to Mr. Norman Somerville, president of the Empire Club. The letter was an acknowledgment of a resolution to him recently passed at a general meeting of the club.

"There were many who professed that they were very nervous as to the outcome," he continues, "but to those of us who have daily witnessed for the past three years deeds of the noblest valor, have seen men sacrificing all, even life itself, for the love of home and country, the result was never in doubt. We knew that fathers and mothers of Canadian heroes would keep faith with the living and with the dead as well. Fully 98 per cent. of the corps voted, and I am quite certain 90 per cent. of these cast their vote for the Union Government. We have every confidence that a Government so thoroughly endorsed by the people of Canada would appreciate to the full its responsibility."

The First Sea Lord.

Here is a limerick published recently in Table Talk concerning the pronunciation of the name of the new British First Sea Lord: An Englishman whose name was Wemyss

Went crazy at last, so it seemys,
Because people would not Understand that they ought
To call him, not Wemiss, but Weems.

Answering the question: "What do you know about Marseilles?" an English schoolboy wrote, as reported in the London Morning Post: "It is the place where pianos stop." The instructor had informed the class that Marseilles was the stopping-place of the Peninsular & Oriental Steamship Line, commonly known as the "P. and O."

NEW BOOKS AT THE LIBRARY.

A large consignment of new books has been received at the library and will be catalogued and placed in circulation at once. There is the usual quantity of the latest fiction, juvenile and miscellaneous books. The attention of the members is directed to the following volumes which will be found in the new stack room and may be examined and taken out.

COMRADES IN COURAGE—one of the three truly great books that the war has brought forth in France. In it we may witness the unfolding of the soul of a great nation.

IN OUR FIRST YEAR OF THE WAR—a collection of the messages and addresses of Woodrow Wilson to the Congress and people of the United States.

THE BOLSHEVIKI AND WORLD PEACE—by Trotzky. Less than a year ago the author lived in an obscure tenement in New York city, to-day he is the most prominent figure in Russia.

OVER THE TOP AND THE FIRST CALL—by Arthur Guy Empey. These two books were written by a young American who incensed at the sinking of the Lusitania went to England and enlisted in the British army. They are the two best selling books in the world to-day. The relation of his experiences told in his simple style are extremely fascinating.

THE WIPERS' TIMES—true copies of a real trench newspaper. By perusing this book the reader is brought in very close touch with actual conditions at the front.

ROMANCE OF OLD JAPAN—an expensive and beautiful volume tracing the legends of the ancient kingdom of the east. The illustrations include some color reproductions of famous paintings.

THE STUDY AND ENJOYMENT OF PICTURES—This book treats of the relation of Art and literature during the nineteenth century. The illustrations have been chosen with great care and are faithful reproductions of some exceptionally fine pictures.

AN AMERICAN PHYSICIAN IN TURKEY—a thrilling story of adventure by a medical missionary who was caught in Turkey at the outbreak of the war. The book throws a flood of light upon the proceedings of the Turks in Armenia and also shows inspiringly what a little group of American missionaries were able to do for the Armenians in their time of trial.

JACK CORNWALL—the story of the boy V.C. "mortally wounded early in the action, he nevertheless remained standing alone at a most exposed post quietly awaiting orders, till the end of the action, with the gun's crew dead and wounded all round him. His age was under 16½ years.

THE TENTH (IRISH) DIVISION IN GALLIPOLI—the thrilling experiences of this famous regiment in their struggle against the Turks.

A TREASURY OF WAR POETRY—here we have the 'permanent record in notable and moving verse of the poignant experiences and deep feelings aroused by the war.

INSIDE CONSTANTINOPLE—by a special agent of the United States Embassy. A book full of startling disclosures.

THE RUSSIAN REVOLUTION—the story of the events leading up to and culminating in the overthrow of the Romanoff dynasty.

FRANCE, ENGLAND AND EUROPEAN DEMOCRACY—a clever historical survey covering the relations between the two countries considered from the thirteenth to the twentieth centuries. The volume presents, furthermore, an able summary of the ideals of France and England and the work they have tried to accomplish.

THE RED INDIAN FAIRY BOOK—a beautiful book dealing with the fairy tales of the American Indian. It will be found interesting to both old and young.

LATEST LIGHT ON ABRAHAM LINCOLN—a goodly portion of this work has been devoted to Lincoln's attitude to religious problems and principles, temperance movements, etc. It will be found a mine of fresh, authentic and, often, astounding facts and anecdotes, many of which are now disclosed for the first time.

CAMPING AND WOODCRAFT—just the book for boy scouts and campers, teaching them how best to take advantage of the ordinary surroundings of the camper and how to best enjoy what nature has provided.

OPENING THE WEST WITH LEWIS AND CLARK—this is a stirring and picturesque story of the untracked west in the early days of Lewis and Clark. The hero is kidnapped by a tribe of Indians in Connecticut, loses his identity and finally joins the Lewis and Clark expedition. Adventures, mishaps and thrilling escapes by boat, horse and foot follow. A splendid book for the boys.

WONDERFUL STUFF!
LIFT OUT YOUR CORN!

Apply a few drops then lift corns or calluses off with fingers—no pain.

No humbug! Any corn, whether new or between the toes, will loose right up and lift out, without a particle of pain or soreness.

This drug is called freezone and is compound of ether discovered by a Cincinnati man.

Ask at any drug store for a small bottle of freezone, which will cost but a trifle, but is sufficient to rid one of every corn or callus.

Put a few drops directly upon a tender, aching corn or callus. Instantly the soreness disappears and shortly the corn or callus will loosen and can be lifted off with the fingers.

This drug freezone doesn't eat out the corns or calluses but shrivels them with out even irritating the surrounding skin.

Just think! No pain at all; no soreness or smarting when applying it afterwards. If your druggist don't have freezone have him order it for you.

Women's Patriotic Service and Red Cross Work

Through the "U. E. Loyalist" Chapter, I.O.D.E.

This week two fine cases of supplies are being shipped for Queen Mary Needlework Guild in Canada, one consisting entirely of hospital supplies for the other of soldiers and sailors comforts.

Among the latter is a parcel of socks contributed by the "Mer Octagon" Club of their own knitting and a generous donation of comforters from Miss Heck. There is still time for further contributions, for though the above-mentioned cases have been shipped this week, supplies or donations will be received at the office in Toronto up to next week.

Progress is being made towards carrying out of our forth-coming entertainment on the 11th 12th June all that is required is a united effort and close and inspiring co-operation among the members of the Chapter and Committee with Mr. Bird make the undertaking a complete and pronounced success.

The work-room is open each Thursday afternoon, do not allow the closing out-of-doors to keep you away from the meetings on that afternoon. N.B.—It is desirable that as patriotic organization a satisfactory response should be made by members of the above Chapter and Committee to the appeal for assistants on Registration Day. The TRAIL BLAZER
to greater Motor Car Value

From the standpoint of dollar for dollar value there's not a car made which offers more for your money than the famous Chevrolet Four-Ninety A.

Before the Chevrolet was made in Canada, good cars were all high in price.

But our mammoth production and manufacturing efficiency enables us to sell the Chevrolet Four-Ninety A at a price much lower than its value when compared with other makes of cars.

With the surplus power developed by the famous valve-in-head motor the owner of a Four-Ninety A invariably is the "trail blazer."

Standard equipment includes speedometer, electric starting and lighting, ammeter, oil indicator light equipment, one man top, demountable rims, non-skid tires on rear wheels and many features usually looked for in cars much higher in price.

CONTINUITY OF BLOOM IN THE FLOWER GARDEN.

(Experimental Farms Note.)

Every experienced gardener starts his flower garden in the autumn. By so doing he can be sure of a continuous display of bloom from the time that the snow disappears until it covers the ground again in the autumn.

The very first flower of the year is the Christmas rose. This frequently forms under the snow and is always in bloom by the time the snow disappears from the border. The crocuses and the squills follow. The really worth while flowers of early spring, however, are the tulips and narcissi. The tulips are the "radiant" flowers of spring which come to us with the first songs of the birds. With the tulips come also the more delicate creamy white and golden narcissi or daffodils. The beautiful and stately Darwin tulips carry the blooming season well on into iris time.

The irises with their many rainbow colours belong to the "ardent" group of flowers. In gorgeousness of colour they are, perhaps, without rival. The Dutch, English, Spanish and Siberian iris lengthen out the season well on into peony time and peony time lasts for several weeks and carries the flowering season into rose time.

From the time when the early bulbs begin to fade until past rose time there is a continuous succession and variety of many of the gorgeous spring flowers. The dazzling and magnificent oriental poppies and the tall spire-like foxtail lilies, recently introduced into Canada, add peculiar charm to the borders.

The flowering shrubs are very beautiful. They are easy to grow and perhaps more graceful even than some of the flowers. First of all the snow garland and sweet-scented currant bloom and these are quickly followed by the lilacs and the Siberian pea trees. A little later comes the graceful Van Houtte's Spiraea. Others are the mock oranges, Japanese roses, rose acacia, summer flowering hydrangea and the smoke bush. The autumn flowering hydrangea carries the season well on into September when the berried shrubs complete the season's record.

Returning to the perennial flowers the next great group is that known as the "showy" group and includes the phloxes, shasta daisies, blanket flower, etc. These are the flowers of July and August.

The annual flowers are at their very best in late July, August and September. They are easily raised from seed sown about the middle of April. Many of them continue in bloom until the killing frosts of October.

Sweet peas must not be forgotten and they augment the flowers of July and August.

The flowers of late autumn constitute the "prevailing" group, which includes the golden sunflowers, the Japanese anemones and the fall or perennial asters. The China aster and the wonderful modern gladioli and the Japanese lilies should also have a place in every garden.

COULD HAVE SAVED THOUSAND DOLLARS

Brown Sorry He Didn't Know About
Tanlac Sooner—Gains 17 Pounds

"I have actually gained seventeen pounds by taking Tanlac, and my recovery has been a surprise to myself as well as all who knew of my dreadful condition," said Walter F. Brown, 132 Yorkville street, Toronto, recently. Mr. Brown, who has been a resident of Toronto all his life, was for many years a traveling salesman, and is now employed by the Robert Simpson Company. He is a member of the Masonic lodge, also of the Commercial Travelers' association, and is highly respected by all who know him.

"If I could have had Tanlac five years ago," continued Mr. Brown, "I could have saved myself not only a world of suffering, but more than a thousand dollars, which I paid out for other treatment and medicines that failed to do me any good. I don't believe anyone ever had a worse case of stomach trouble than I had. In fact, I got so bad off I was given up to die by my family and friends, and had lost about all hope myself of ever getting well. Even the most delicate and dainty dishes failed to arouse my appetite, and the least bit of food of any kind caused me intense suffering. I would bloat up terribly with gas, had a mean, agonizing pain in the pit of my stomach, and was never free from headache. No matter what I ate my suffering was awful, and for over nine months at one time was on a light diet. Half the time I couldn't put on my boots or dress myself, because I didn't have the strength, and my desperate condition can be better understood when I say I had fallen off from one hundred and thirty-five pounds to only ninety-six. I was nothing but a frame of skin and bones, was so nervous I could hardly sleep, and felt so irritable I didn't want anyone around me at all. Everything was done for me, it seems, that could be—X-ray photographs of my stomach were made, stomach pumps used and every treatment known, but no one seemed to understand my case, and I kept getting worse. After spending eight months in the hospital here to no avail, I was advised to go to Mt. Sinai hospital in New York, and I spent three months there, but still didn't improve one bit. I felt that life was hardly worth living, and lost all faith in medicines.

"One day while talking to my brother-in-law he asked me why I didn't take Tanlac, and I said, 'No; I have taken enough stuff, nothing will do me any good. But he insisted until I bought a bottle, and Providence was surely guiding me that day, for I firmly believe that was the move that saved my life. To say it is wonderful the way Tanlac has helped me doesn't half-way express it. I'm already feeling a thousand times better, and am on the road to health after five years of torture. I have already picked up from ninety-six to one hundred and thirteen pounds, and am looking and feeling better than I have in years. My appetite is fine, the gas and pain has all disappeared from my stomach, and I can eat most anything I want without the slightest inconvenience. My friends are simply amazed at my wonderful improvement. I have also told the physicians who did all they

In France.

The experiences of a party of Canadian, British and American soldiers during a trip to Versailles are amusingly recorded by a woman who regularly conducts such parties of sight-seers. Coming into the grand ballroom, "of a size and splendor never equalled in the history of the world," a laconic trooper remarks, "Some dugout." At the dining luncheon a Canuck says that the napkins would make good souvenirs. "The English," he says, jocosely, "fight for honor, the French for glory, and the Canadians for souvenirs." When the waiter presents the bill, a jolly trooper glances at it, falls back in his chair, and screams, "Quick, quick, give me my gas mask!" The young woman who led the party above referred to is ingenious in her methods of amusing the men. In the park at Versailles she stops and says: "Boy, the French have a pretty saying, 'The smaller the ivy leaf, the dearer the love.' So I want one of you to find the tiniest leaf possible and send it to the one that's waiting at home." The men set out to search for the smallest leaf. "The joker of the party comes to me with a perfectly enormous leaf, which he informs me he has plucked for his mother-in-law!" Another sarcastic young fellow brings a leaf even larger, and when asked what loved one is to have that tiny leaf, he says, "It's for the Kaiser!"

The Hopping Test.

If you can hop twenty times on each foot without showing signs of undue distress, the British army considers your health good enough for general service, according to a new book of instruction issued to the examining medical boards. The test recommended is as follows:

"The rate of the pulse is taken, and then the recruit is directed to hop twenty times on each foot, raising the other foot nine inches. At the end of this performance, in health, there should be no noteworthy breathlessness and no pallor or anxiety of expression. Two minutes later the pulse should be not more than five beats more frequent than it was before the exercise."

Correct.

Mrs. Busybody—Your husband goes out a good deal, doesn't he?
Mrs. Keen—Oh, I don't know; he doesn't go out any oftener than he comes in.

THE BRITISH PALACES.

The Homes of the Royal Families of England.

Some misapprehension exists concerning the offer by his Majesty of certain royal palaces to the nation for war purposes. There has not been a new or recent offer, but his Majesty long ago declared his willingness to place certain royal residences at the disposal of the nation. The following statement on the subject is authorized:

"In August, 1914, Kensington Palace and St. James' Palace were offered by the King to the Red Cross, but both these buildings were found to be unsuitable for the purpose of a hospital for several reasons, notably the absence of an efficient drainage system. In 1916 Balmoral was offered, first of all as a hospital, and secondly as a convalescent home, but the fact that it could only be used for eight months in the year, and the great distance from London, proved insuperable objections to his Majesty's offer being accepted.

"At the beginning of 1916 the question whether the state rooms at Buckingham Palace could not be used in any way by the Red Cross was seriously discussed, but the same difficulty with regard to the drains occurred. To make the palace suitable for this purpose it would have been necessary to build a separate entrance, so that the weekly investitures should not be interfered with, the only entrance into the state rooms being the grand entrance, and if this was utilized for hospital purposes his Majesty would have been obliged to discontinue the investitures. It having been reported to his Majesty that there was no existing further demand for beds for the wounded in London the King came to the conclusion that the expense of creating an efficient drainage system, erecting lifts, and building a separate entrance could hardly be justified, and that it would be wiser for him to give a large subscription to the Central Committee of the Red Cross and Order of St. John of Jerusalem than to spend money on these alterations. His Majesty accordingly gave the sum of £10,000 last year.

"The King has, however, made it clear to the Red Cross that in the event of there being any dearth of beds for the wounded in London he will be pleased to consider whether the state rooms at Buckingham Palace could not even now be converted into a hospital.

"While no use has been found for Balmoral, St. James' Palace is occupied by Queen Mary's Needlework Guild, and also the North of Ireland Association for supplying comforts to Irish regiments. Kensington Palace has been handed over to Lady McDonnell for the Irish Regiments' Comforts Fund.

"The question as to whether any of the apartments at present occupied by organizations supplying comfort to the troops, or even the State Apartments at Buckingham Palace could be profitably used for Government purposes, is still under consideration by his Majesty's First Commissioner of Works and there the matter stands for the present.

"The King's sole anxiety in reference to these questions is and has always been to do his best for the nation and for the men of his fighting forces, and no considerations of personal convenience have been or will be entertained by his Majesty."

Use of the Walnut Tree.

Most of the oldest Walnut trees in England were originally planted, not for the sake of the fruit, but because the wood makes the best gun-stocks, being light, strong, and not easily warped. The largest walnut grove in England is at Kempston, near Bedford. It contained at first three hundred and sixty-five trees one for each day of the year, which were planted about a century ago by the then owner of the farm, who remarked that wars would never cease and the timber would always be wanted for gun-stocks.—Family Herald.

Hoover in Australia

As He Impressed Men

Who Met Him While There

AUSTRALIA has discovered Herbert Clarke Hoover, the United States Food Administrator. It remembers that Mr. Hoover began his career in Australia as far as high finance and big business are concerned. Men who worked with him in the Commonwealth many years ago recall with pleasure to-day the keen, reliant, youthful American who saw vast potentialities in the tailings dumps of Broken Hill. Among these friends is Mr. W. L. Baillieu, M.L.C., one of Australia's foremost mining and commercial leaders.

From different sources an interesting story has been gathered of Mr. Hoover's early days. His ability was noticed in 1898 by Mr. C. A. Moreing, of the firm of Bewick, Moreing & Co. Mr. Moreing brought Mr. Hoover to Australia and gave him the management of Hannan's Brown Hill at Kalgoorlie, West Australia.

In 1901 he left Australia for China still under the direction of the same firm, obtained valuable mineral concessions and qualified for the partnership which the firm granted to him in 1908. It was while paying a special visit to Australia as a partner in the firm of Bewick, Moreing & Co. that he became aware of the possibilities of the flotation process for making valuable the unused zinc tailings dumps at Broken Hill. He secured options over the great accumulations of zinciferous ore and tailings available. His firm in conjunction with other firms formed the Zinc Corporation Ltd., which to-day is said to have an ore reserve of 1,700,000 tons.

A personal description of Mr. Hoover is given by Mr. W. L. Baillieu, who says:

"I first met Mr. Hoover about 12 years ago, and regarding him from a business standpoint, he was one of the most capable men I have ever encountered. His business and economical sense was of the highest order, and he always got right to the heart of the matter under consideration by the shortest route. Having heard his views, which were almost always convincing, one felt that the ground had been covered completely, and that there was little else to be said concerning it.

"The business under consideration having been concluded, it was Mr. Hoover's habit to call in his typist and dictate while walking restlessly up and down the room. Then he would have the typed script read over, and, turning to his business associates, would ask if there was anything to add to it. From that moment the business in hand, however important, was fixed and put behind him, and his mind became centered on the next problem to be dealt with.

"I often felt in talking with Mr. Hoover that it would have been a good thing for the business world if a gramophone with a receptive record could have been on hand to register some of the many excellent and original business axioms he so frequently voiced. He was eminently logical, and his ability for lucid expression was complete.

"I cannot claim a personal friendship with Mr. Hoover for the reason only that he did not make intimate on the next problem to be dealt with. "I often felt in talking with Mr. Hoover that it would have been a good thing for the business world if a gramophone with a receptive record could have been on hand to register some of the many excellent and original business axioms he so frequently voiced. He was eminently logical, and his ability for lucid expression was complete.

"I cannot claim a personal friendship with Mr. Hoover for the reason only that he did not make intimate friendships. We were associated in business dealings essentially; otherwise he was a man apart. But one could not help feeling interested in the man; there was so much that was original in him. His outlook on life was so thoroughly sane, and his manner of going through it at times amusingly quaint.

"His hobby was motoring, and if anything went wrong he attended to it himself, for in addition to being theoretical, he was also a practical engineer—practicality in everything was his strong point. Dressed in correct attire, he would get out and get under; and reappear from beneath the chassis covered with grease and dust, with a spanner in his hand, and grinning with the pleasure of having conquered a difficulty. Just as likely as not he would not bother to remove from himself the traces of his honorable toil. Some called him morose, but he had a keen sense of humor, and when it bubbled up he got it off as soon as possible, and never let it interfere with the serious business of life.

"When calling on a man to do business, he would walk in with his hands deep in his pockets, regard the person with a direct and earnest look, put his questions, receive his answers, and walk out.

"In business he was cold, keen, alert, and I know of no one who understood better the basic fact that people can better themselves only by the production of labor properly and economically applied.

"I think it adds to the wonderful acumen and foresight displayed by President Wilson that he should have picked out from a hundred million people the man who is so eminently fitted successfully to carry out the great work with which he has been intrusted. His career is an exemplary one for boys to consider."

Future for Armless Men.

Mechanical arms, with which it is possible to thread a needle, sew on a button, use a typewriter, and light and fill a pipe, were exhibited in London recently. The device is the invention of M. Cauet, and all these actions were performed with ease by Lieut. Levat, who has lost both arms. The arm weighs only 1½ pounds, and can be fixed in a few seconds.

The various actions are produced on the Bowden brake principle, the movement of the shoulders regulating the springs of the arm, and the movement of the chest causing the opening and closing of the fingers. With this invention a maimed man can pick up a pin or wield a sledgehammer. Lieut. Levat showed how easy it was to write with artificial hands.

These arms are being supplied in large numbers to the French army, and many officers who have been fitted with them are now in the trenches, whilst an officer of the Flying Corps continues to pilot his machine with the aid of one of them.

They are being manufactured in this country—by armless men.—Tit-Bits.

The Ford Saves the Hay and Oats the Horses Eat

IT HAS been estimated that five acres of land are required to maintain one horse for a year, and that the same five acres would produce nearly enough food for two people. If 50,000 Canadian farmers each replaced one horse with a Ford, 250,000 acres would be added to the Nation's source of food supply and enough extra food made available to feed 100,000 people.

Just think what a great service this means to the country at the present time and the benefit to the farmers from the sale of food produced on this acreage.

A Ford car also saves the farmer a week or more of valuable time each year, which can be used for further productive work. The Ford travels three times as fast as a horse and rig—costs less to run and keep, and is far easier to take care of. With labor so scarce and high priced, time means money, so do not delay in getting your Ford.

Copyright, 1916, by Little, Brown & Co.

In due course the Chickamin bore in under Halfway Point, opened out a sheltered bight where the watery commotion outside raised but a faint ripple, and drew in alongside a float.

The girl swept lake shore, bay and sloping forest with a quickening eye. Here was no trim painted cottage and no velvet lawn. In the waters beside and lining the beach floated innumerable logs, confined by boom sticks; hundreds of trunks of fir, forty and sixty feet long, four and six feet across the butt, timber enough, when it had passed through the sawmills, to build four such towns as Hopyard. Just back from the shore, amid stumps and littered branches, rose the roofs of divers buildings. One was long and low. Hard by it stood another of like type, but of lesser dimension. Two or three mere shanties lifted level with great stumps—crude, unpainted buildings. Smoke issued from the pipe of the larger, and a white aproned man stood in the doorway.

Somewhere in the screen of woods a whistle shrilled. Benton looked at his watch.

"We made good time in spite of the little roll," said he. "That's the donkey blowing quitting time, 6 o'clock. Well, come on up to the shack, sis. Sam, you get a wheelbarrow and run those trunks up after supper, will you?"

Away in the banked timber beyond the maples and alder, which Stella now saw masked the bank of a small stream flowing by the cabins, a faint call rose, long drawn:

"Tim-ber-r-r-r!"

They moved along a path beaten through fern and clawing blackberry vine toward the camp, Benton carrying the two grips. A loud, sharp crack split the stillness; then a mild swishing sound arose. Hard on the heels of that followed a rending, tearing crash, a thud that sent tremors through the solid earth under their feet. The girl started.

"Falling gang dropped a big fir," Charlie laughed. "You'll get used to that. You'll hear it a good many times a day here."

"Good heavens, it sounded like the end of the world!" she said.

"Well, you can't fell a stick of timber 200 feet high and six or eight feet through without making a pretty considerable noise," her brother remarked complacently. "I like that sound myself. Every big tree that goes down means a bunch of money."

He led the way past the mess house,

"You're home, anyway," he said. "That's something."

themselves with a free and reckless swing, the doubles in type of that roistering crew she had seen embark on Jack Fyfe's boat.

All about that cook house dooryard spread a confusion of empty tin cans, gaudily labeled, containers of corn and peas and tomatoes. Dishwater and refuse, chips, scraps, all the refuse of the camp was scattered there in unlovely array.

But that made no more than a passing impression upon her. She was thinking as she removed her hat and gloves of what queer angles come now and then to the human mind. She wondered why she should be sufficiently interested in her brother's hired men to drive off a compelling attack of the blues in consideration of them as men. Nevertheless she found herself unable to view them as she had viewed, say, the clerks in her father's office.

She began to brush her hair and to wonder what sort of food would be served for supper.

CHAPTER III.

A Forest of Things to Come

practice democracy."

"Something like that," he responded carelessly and went on eating his supper.

"I should have been a man," Miss Estella Benton pensively remarked. "Then I could put on overalls and make myself useful instead of being a drone. There doesn't seem to be anything here I can do. I could keep house—only you haven't any house to keep, therefore no need of a housekeeper."

"Say, Stell, can you cook?" asked her brother.

"A little," Stella rejoined guardedly. "Why do you ask?"

"Why, your wail about being a man and putting on overalls and digging in reminded me that if you liked you may have a chance to get on your apron and show us what you can do," he laughed. "Matt's about due to go on a tear. He's been on the water wagon now about his limit. The first man that comes along with a bottle of whisky Matt will get it and quit and head for town. I was wondering if you could keep the gang from starving to death if that happened. The last time I had to get in and cook for two weeks myself. And I can't run a logging crew from the cook shanty very well."

"I dare say I could manage," Stella returned dubiously. "This seems to be a terrible place for drinking. Is it the accepted thing to get drunk at all times and in public?"

"It's about the only excitement there is," Benton smiled tolerantly. "I guess there is no more drinking out here than any other part of this North American continent. Only a man here gets drunk openly and riotously without any effort to hide it and without it being considered anything but a natural lapse. That's one thing you'll have to get used to out here, Stell—I mean that what vices men have are all on the surface. We don't get drunk secretly at the club and sneak home in a taxi. Oh, well, we'll cross the bridge when we come to it. Matt may not break out for weeks."

He yawned openly.

"Sleepy?" Stella inquired.

"I get up every morning between 4 and 5," he replied, "and I can go to sleep any time after supper."

"I think I'll take a walk along the beach," she said abruptly.

"All right. Don't hike into the woods and get lost, though."

She circled the segment of bay, climbed a low, rocky point and found herself a seat on a fallen tree. Outside the lake heaved uneasily, still dotted with whitecaps whipped up by the southerly gale. At her feet surge after surge hammered the gravelly shore. Far through the woods behind her the wind whistled and hummed among swaying tops of giant fir and cedar. There was a heady freshness in that rollicking wind, an odor resinous and pungent mingled with that elusive smell of green growing stuff along the shore. Beginning where she sat, tree trunks rose in immense brown pillars, running back in great forest naves, shadowy always, floored with green moss laid in a rich, soft carpet for the wood sprites' feet. Far beyond the long gradual lower slope lifted a range of saw backed mountains, the sanctuary of wild goat and bear, and across the rolling lake lifted other mountains sheer from the water's edge, peaks rising above timber line in majestic contour, their pinnacle crests grazing the clouds that scudded before the south wind.

Beauty? Yes. A wild, imposing grandeur that stirred some responsive chord in her. If one only could live

Her wandering gaze at length came to rest on a tent top showing in the brush northward from the camp.

laughed. "You'll get used to that. You'll hear it a good many times a day here."

"Good heavens, it sounded like the end of the world!" she said.

"Well, you can't fell a stick of timber 200 feet high and six or eight feet through without making a pretty considerable noise," her brother remarked complacently. "I like that sound myself. Every big tree that goes down means a bunch of money."

He led the way past the mess house, from the doorway of which the aproned cook eyed her with frank curiosity, hailing his employer with nonchalant air, a cigarette resting in one corner of his mouth. Benton opened the door of the second building. Stella followed him in.

It had the saving grace of cleanliness, according to logging camp standards, but the bareness of it appalled her. There was a rusty box heater, littered with cigar and cigarette stubs; a desk fabricated of undressed boards, a homemade chair or two, sundry boxes standing about. The sole concession to comfort was a rug of cheap Axminster covering half the floor. The walls were decorated chiefly with miscellaneous clothing suspended from nails, a few maps and blueprints tacked up askew. Straight across from the entering door another stood ajar, and she could see further vistas of bare board wall, small, dusty window panes and a bed whereon gray blankets were tumbled as they fell when a waking sleeper cast them aside.

Benton crossed the room and threw open another door.

"Here's a nook I fixed up for you, Stella," he said briskly. "It isn't very fancy, but it's the best I could do just now."

She followed him in silently. He set her two bags on the floor and turned to go. Then some impulse moved him to turn back, and he put both hands on her shoulders and kissed her gently.

"You're home, anyway," he said. "That's something, if it isn't what you're used to. Try to overlook the crudities. We'll have supper as soon as you feel like it."

He went out, closing the door behind him.

Miss Estella Benton stood in the middle of the room fighting against a swift heart sinking, a terrible depression that strove to master her.

"Good Lord in heaven," she muttered at last, "what a place to be marooned in! It's—it's simply impossible."

Her gaze roved about the room. A square box, neither more nor less, 14 by 14 feet of bare board wall, unpainted and unpurged. There was an iron bed, a willow rocker and a rude closet for clothes in one corner. A duplicate of the department store bargain rug in the other room lay on the floor. On an upturned box stood an enamel pitcher and a tin washbasin. That was all.

She sat down on the bed and viewed it forlornly. A wave of sickening rebellion against everything swept over her. To herself she seemed as irrevocably alone as if she had been lost in the depths of the dark timber that rose on every hand. And, sitting there, she heard at length the voices of men. Looking out through a window curtained with cheesecloth, she saw her brother's logging gang swing past, stout woodsmen all, big men, tall men, short bodied men with thick necks and shoulders, sunburned, all grimy with the sweat of their labors, carrying wondered why she should be sufficiently interested in her brother's hired men to drive off a compelling attack of the blues in consideration of them as men. Nevertheless she found herself unable to view them as she had viewed, say, the clerks in her father's office.

She began to brush her hair and to wonder what sort of food would be served for supper.

CHAPTER III.

A Foretaste of Things to Come.

HALF an hour later she sat down with her brother at one end of a table that was but a long bench covered with oilcloth. Chairs there were none. A narrow movable bench on each side of the fixed table furnished seating capacity for twenty men, provided none objected to an occasional nudging from his neighbor's elbow. The dishes, different from any she had ever eaten from, were of enormously thick porcelain, dead white, variously chipped and cracked with fine seams. But the food, if plain, was of excellent quality, tastily cooked. She discovered herself with an appetite wholly independent of silver and cut glass and linen. The tin spoons and steel knives and forks harrowed her aesthetic sense without impairing her ability to satisfy hunger.

They had the dining room to themselves. Through a single shiplap partition rose a rumble of masculine talk, where the logging crew loafed in their bunkhouse. The cook served them without any ceremony, putting everything on the table at once—soup, meat, vegetables, a bread pudding for dessert, coffee in a tall tin pot. Benton introduced him to his sister. He withdrew hastily to the kitchen, and they saw no more of him.

"Charlie," the girl said plaintively, when the man had closed the door behind him, "I don't quite fathom your social customs out here. Is one supposed to know everybody that one encounters?"

"Just about," he grinned. "Loggers, Siwashes and the natives in general. Can't very well help it, sis. There's so few people in this neck of the woods that nobody can afford to be exclusive—at least, nobody who lives here any length of time. You can't tell when you may have to call on your neighbor or the fellow working for you in a matter of life and death almost. A man couldn't possibly maintain the same attitude toward a bunch of loggers working under him that would be considered proper back where we came from. Take me, for instance, and my case is no different from any man operating on a moderate scale out here. I'd get the reputation of being swell headed and they'd put me in the hole at every turn. They wouldn't care what they did or how it was done. Ten to one I couldn't keep a capable working crew three weeks on end. On the other hand, take a bunch of loggers on a payroll working for a man that meets them on an equal footing—why, they'll go to h— and back again for him. They're as loyal as soldiers to the flag. They're a mighty self sufficient, independent lot, these lumberjacks, and that goes for most everybody knocking about in this country—loggers, prospectors, miners, settlers and all. If you're what they term 'all right' you can do anything and they'll back you up. If you go to putting on airs and trying to assert yourself as a superior being they'll go out of their way to hand you packages of trouble."

"I see," she observed thoughtfully. "One's compelled by circumstances to in a rich, soft carpet for the wood sprites' feet. Far beyond the long gradual lower slope lifted a range of saw backed mountains, the sanctuary of wild goat and bear, and across the rolling lake lifted other mountains sheer from the water's edge, peaks rising above timber line in majestic contour, their pinnacle crests grazing the clouds that scudded before the south wind.

Beauty? Yes. A wild, imposing grandeur that stirred some responsive chord in her. If one only could live amid such surrounding with a contented mind, she thought, the wilderness would have compensations of its own. She had an uneasy feeling that isolation from everything that had played an important part in her life might be the least depressing factor in this new existence. She could not view the rough and ready standards of the woods with much equanimity—not as she had that day seen them set forth. These things were bound to be a part of her daily life, and all the brief span of her years had gone to forming habits of speech and thought and manner diametrically opposed to what she had so far encountered.

It was too late to mourn over lost opportunities now, but she did wish there was some one thing she could do and do well, some service of value that would guarantee self support. If she could only pound a typewriter or keep a set of books or even make a passable attempt at sewing she would have felt vastly more at ease in this rude logging camp, knowing that she could leave it if she desired.

So far as she could see things she looked at them with measurable clearness, without any vain illusions concerning her ability to march triumphant over unknown fields of endeavor. Along practical lines she had everything to learn. Culture furnishes an excellent pair of wings wherewith to soar in skies of abstraction, but is a poor vehicle to carry one over rough roads. She might have remained in Philadelphia, a guest among friends. Pride forbade that. Incidentally, such an arrangement would have enabled her to stalk a husband, a moneyed husband, which did not occur to her at all. There remained only to join Charlie. If his fortunes mended, well and good. Perhaps she could even help in minor ways.

But it was all so radically different—brother and all—from what she had pictured that she was filled with dismay and not a little foreboding of the future. Sufficient, however, unto the day was the evil thereof, she told herself at last, and tried to make that as-

saw two canoes drawn up on the beach above the lash of the waves, two small figures playing on the gravel and sun-dry dogs prowling alongshore. Smoke went eddying away in the wind. A Indian camp, Miss Benton supposed.

She had an impulse to skirt the bay and view the Indian camp at close range, a notion born of curiosity. She debated this casually, and just as she was about to rise her movement was arrested by a faint crackle in the wood behind. She looked away through the deepening shadow among the trees and saw nothing at first. But the sound was repeated at odd intervals. She sat still. Thoughts of forest animals slipped into her mind without making her afraid. At last she caught sight of a man striding through the timber, soundlessly on the thick moss, coming almost straight toward her.

He was scarcely fifty yards away. Across his shoulder he bore a reddish gray burden, and in his right hand was a gun. She did not move. Bowed slightly under the weight, the man passed within twenty feet of her, so close that she could see the sweat beads glisten on that side of his face, and saw also that the load he carried was the carcass of a deer.

Gaining the beach and laying the animal across a boulder he straightened himself up and drew a long breath. Then he wiped the sweat off his face. A sturdily built man about thirty, of Saxon fairness, with a tinge of red in his hair and a liberal display of freckles across nose and cheek bones. He was no beauty, she decided, albeit he displayed a frank and pleasing countenance. That he was a remarkable, strong and active man she had seen for herself, and if the firm round of his jaw counted for anything an individual of considerable determination besides. Miss Benton conceived herself to be possessed of considerable skill at a character analysis.

AUTO-INTOXICATION OR SELF-POISONING

FRUIT-A-TIVES™ Absolutely Prevents This Dangerous Condition.

The chief cause of poor health is our neglect of the bowels. Waste matter, instead of passing from the lower intestine regularly every day, is allowed to remain there, generating poisons which are absorbed by the blood.

In other words, a person who is habitually constipated, is poisoning himself. We know now that Auto-intoxication, due to non-action of the bowels, is directly responsible for serious Kidney and Bladder Troubles; that it upsets the Stomach, causes indigestion, Loss of Appetite and sleeplessness; that chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Pain In The Back, are relieved as soon as the bowels become regular; and that Pimples, Rashes, eczema and other Skin Affections appear when "Fruit-a-tives" are taken to correct Constipation.

"Fruit-a-tives" will protect you against Auto-intoxication because this wonderful fruit medicine acts directly on all the eliminating organs. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. at all dealers or sent on receipt of 10c by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

ance work a change of heart. She was a very lonely and depressed and full of a futile wish that she were a man. Over across the bay some one was playing an accordion, and to its strains stout lunged lumberjack was roaring a song, with all his fellows joining in the chorus:

"The Saginaw Kid was a cook in a camp way up on the Ocon-to-o-o, the cook in a camp in them old days had a — hard row to hoe-l-oh! — Had a — hard row to hoe."

There was a fine, rollicking air to it. The careless note in their voices, the lilting of their song made her envious. They at least had their destiny, ited as it might be and cast along easy ways, largely under their own control. Her wandering gaze at length came to rest on a tent top showing in the sh northward from the camp. She

He put away his handkerchief, took up his rifle, settled his hat and strode off toward the camp. Her attention now diverted from the Siwash, she watched him, saw him go to her brother's quarters, stand in the door a minute, then go back to the beach accompanied by Charlie.

In a minute or so he came rowing across in a skiff, threw his deer aboard and pulled away north along the shore.

She watched him lift and fall among the waves until he turned a point, rowing with strong, even strokes. Then she walked home. Benton was poring over some figures, but he pushed aside his pencil and paper when she entered.

"You had a visitor, I see," she remarked.

"Yes, Jack Fyfe. He picked up a deer on the ridge behind here and barrowed a boat to get home."

"I saw him come out of the woods," she said. "His camp can't be far from here, is it? He only left the springs as you came in. Does he hunt deer for sport?"

"Hardly. Oh, well, I suppose it's sport for Jack, in a way. He's always piking around in the woods with a gun or a fishing rod," Benton returned. "But we kill 'em to eat mostly. It's good meat and cheap. I get one myself now and then. However, you want to keep that under your hat—about us fellows hunting—or we'll have game warden nosing around here."

"Are you not allowed to hunt them?" she asked.

"Not in close season. Hunting season's from September to December."

"If it's unlawful, why break the law?" she ventured hesitatingly. "Isn't that rather—er?"

"Oh, bosh!" Charlie derided. "A man in the woods is entitled to venison, if he's hunter enough to get it. The woods are full of deer, and a few more or less don't matter. We can't run forty miles to town and back and pay famine prices for beef every two or three days when we can get it at home in the woods."

Stella digested this in silence, but it occurred to her that this mild sample of lawlessness was quite in keeping with the men and the environment. There was no policeman on the corner, no mechanism of law and order visible anywhere. The characteristic attitude of these woodsmen was of intolerance for restraint, of complete self-sufficiency. It had colored her brother's point of view. She perceived that whereas all her instinct was to know the rules of the game and abide by them, taking his cue from his environment, inclined to break rules that proved inconvenient, even to formulate new ones to apply.

"And suppose," said she, "that a game warden should catch you or Mr. Jack Fyfe killing deer out of season?"

"We'd be hauled up and fined a hundred dollars or so," he told her. "But they don't catch us."

He shrugged his shoulders and, smiling tolerantly upon her, proceeded to smoke.

Dusk was falling now, the long twilight of the northern seasons gradually deepening, as they sat in silence. Along the creek bank arose the evening chorus of the frogs. The air, now hushed and still, was riven every few minutes by the whirr of wings as ducks in evening flight swept by above. All the boisterous laughter and talk in the bunkhouse had died. The woods ranged gloomy and impenetrable, save only in the northwest, where a patch of sky thing to occupy your time. I'd have to pay a cook $70 a month. Katy draws $25. You can credit yourself with the balance and I'll pay off when the contract money comes in. We might as well keep the coin in the family. I'll feel easier, because you won't get drunk and jump the job in a pinch. What do you say?"

She said the only possible thing to say under the circumstances. But she did not say it with pleasure nor with any feeling of gratitude. It was hard work, and she and hard work were utter strangers. Her feet ached from continual standing on them. The heat and the smell of stewing meat and vegetables sickened her. Her hands were growing rough and red from dabbling in water, punching bread dough, handling the varied articles of food that go to make up a meal. Upon hands and forearms there stung continually certain small cuts and burns that lack of experience over a hot range inevitably inflicted upon her. Whereas time had promised to hang heavy on her hands, now an hour of idleness in the day became a precious boon.

Yet in her own way she was as full of determination as her brother. She saw plainly enough that she must leave the drone stage behind. She perceived that to be fed and clothed and housed and to have her wishes readily gratified temper, more crabbedly moody than ever. Eventually his ill nature broke out against Stella over some trifle, and she, being herself an aggrieved party to his transactions, surprised her own sense of the fitness of things by retaliating in kind.

"I'm slaving away in your old camp from daylight till dark at work I despise, and you can't even speak decently to me," she flared up. "You act like a perfect brute lately. What's the matter with you?"

Benton gnawed at a finger nail in silence.

"Hang it, I guess you're right," he admitted at last. "But I can't help having a grouch. I'm going to fall behind on this contract, the best I can do."

"Well," she replied tartly, "I'm not to blame for that. I'm not responsible for your failure. Why take it out on me?"

"I don't particularly," he answered. "Only—can't you sabb? A man gets on edge when he works and sweats for months and sees it all about to come to nothing."

"So does a woman," she made pointed retort.

Benton chose to ignore the inference. He sat a minute or two longer, again preoccupied with his problems.

used part of the bankroll. You won't have much use for money up here, any-

He flipped the purse across to her and sauntered into his bedroom. Stella sat gazing thoughtfully at the vast bulk of Mount Douglas a few minutes longer.
Then she, too, went into the boxlike room, the bare discomfort of which chilled her merely to behold.

With a curious uncertainty, a feeling of reluctance for the proceeding almost,
she examined the contents of her purse.
For a little time she stood gazing into
it, a queer curl to her full red lips.
Then she flung it contemptuously on the bed and began to take down her hair.

"A rich, rough, tough country, where it doesn't do to be finicky about anything," she murmured, quoting a line
from one of Charlie Benton's letters.
"It would appear to be rather unpleasantly true. Particularly the last clause."

In her purse, which had contained $110, there now reposed in solitary
state a twenty dollar bill.

CHAPTER IV.

The Dignity (?) of Toil.

BY such imperceptible degrees that she was scarce aware of it, Stella took her place as a cog in her brother's logging machine, a unit in the human mechanism which he operated skillfully and relentlessly at top speed to achieve his desired end—1,000-000 feet of timber in boomsticks by Sept. 1.

From the evening that she stepped into the breach created by a drunken cook the kitchen burden settled steadily upon her shoulders. For a week Benton daily expected and spoke of the arrival of a new cook. Fyfe had wired a Vancouver employment agency to send one the day he took Jim Renfrew down. But either cooks were scarce or the order went astray, for no rough and ready kitchen mechanic arrived. Benton in the meantime ceased to look for
one. He worked like a horse, unsparing of himself, unsparing of others. He rose at half past 4, lighted the kitchen fire, roused Stella and helped her prepare breakfast, preliminary to his day in the woods. Later he impressed Katy John, a half breed Siwash girl, into service to wait on the table and wash dishes. He labored patiently to teach Stella certain simple tricks of cooking that she did not know.

Quick of perception, as thorough as her brother in whatsoever she set her hand to do, Stella was soon equal to the job. And as the days passed and no camp cook came to their relief Benton left the job to her as a matter of course.

"You can handle that kitchen with Katy as well as a man," he said to her at last. "And it will give you sometain small cuts and burns that lack of experience over a hot range inevitably inflicted upon her. Whereas time had promised to hang heavy on her hands,

now an hour of idleness in the day became a precious boon.

Yet in her own way she was as full of determination as her brother. She saw plainly enough that she must leave the drone stage behind. She perceived that to be fed and clothed and housed and to have her wishes readily gratified was not an inherent right; that someone must foot the bill; that now for all she received she must return equitable value. At home she had never thought of it in that light; in fact, she had never thought of it at all. Now that she was beginning to get a glimmering of her true economic relation to the world at large she had no wish to emulate the clinging vine, even if thereby she could have secured a continuance of that silk lined existence which had been her fortunate lot. Her pride revolted against parasitism. It was therefore a certain personal satisfaction to have achieved self support at a stroke, in so far as that in the sweat of her brow—all too literally—she earned her bread and a compensation besides. But there were times when that solace seemed scarcely to weigh against her growing detest for the endless routine of her task, the exasperating physical weariness and irritations that it brought upon her.

For to prepare three times daily food
for a dozen hungry men is no mean undertaking. One cannot have in a logging camp the conveniences of a hotel kitchen. The water must be carried in buckets from the creek near by and wood brought in armfuls from the pile of sawn blocks outside. The low roofed kitchen shanty was always like an oven. The flies swarmed in their tens of thousands. As the men sweated with ax and saw in the woods, so she sweated in the kitchen. And her work began two hours before their day's labor and continued two hours after they were done. She slept like one exhausted and rose full of sleep heaviness, full of bodily soreness and spiritual protest when the alarm clock raised its din in the cool morning.

For a week thereafter Benton developed moods of sourness, periods of scowling thought. He tried to speed up his gang, and, having all spring driven them at top speed, the added
straw broke the back of their patience, and Stella heard some sharp interchanges of words. He quelled one incipient mutiny through sheer dominance, but it left him more short of

"I don't particularly," he answered.
"Only—can't you see? A man gets

Fish for the Clam With Dynamite.

A clam cannot come out of its shell. Its home is on the low sandstone ledges into which it bores by means of its sharp shell, to a depth of six or eight inches.

The little pholas or boring clam is a great delicacy on the Pacific coast.
Its meat is juicy and tender and is excellent in chowder. Consequently, fishermen are not content to dislodge
the clams slowly with pick and crowbar. They use dynamite, one blast of which dislodges hundreds of clams.—Popular Science Monthly.

BAG MATCHES HAT VEST IS FEATURE

This is the Last Word in Fashion for the Shopper.

Handsome Affairs of Velvet, Silk, Satin and Metal Brocades Have Replaced Those of Cretonne.

We started with lovely cretonne knitting bags, blooming with roses and chrysanthemums, others made gay with gorgeously colored birds and butterflies. These were shirred and ribbon-trimmed and often had clusters of silk fruit as the finishing touch.

But these cretonne bags, attractive as they were, have quite faded into the background, making way for the more handsome affairs of velvet, silk, satins and wonderful metal brocades, writes Ena Shepherd in the Detroit News. Nor are they confined to knitting only. The knitting part is secondary. They are the most convenient and smart shopping bags one can imagine and the most troublesome of bundles disappear like magic into their vast depths.

The last word in fashion is the shopping bag with hat to match. The sketch shows an example of these. A huge shopping bag was developed in metal brocade, done in gold and black, was made on the order of a huge purse. The wide opening, bound with gold braid. The strong handles were of gold braid, too, and were fastened to the bag with gold braid rosettes. It was attractively lined with gold-colored silk. The hat to match made on

Made Part of an Attractive Little Suit Dress.

Bustle Silhouette, Being the Newest Style Note of the Season, Cannot Be Ignored.

The clever little suit dress shown in the sketch may be attractively developed in navy blue serge or gaberdine with vest of white satin. As the small sketch will indicate, this is another of the bustle frocks, but inasmuch as the bustle silhouette, whether applied to dresses or suits, is the newest style note of the season, it is difficult to ignore it.

Advance style notes concerning the bustle frocks and suits were rather forbidding, for one immediately visualized of a century ago, re-enforced with stiff linings and even supported and kept in place by means of wire rolls and other equally unattractive mechanical devices.

The bustle of 1917-18, however, is very smart and really such a modest and unobtrusive affair that a "close up" view is sometimes required in order to be sure that a certain chic frock is really of the bustle class, says a fashion writer in the Washington Star.

The bustle is usually an arrangement of the drapery. Occasionally a

FOR EARLY SPRING VARIETY OF WRAPS

Attractive Gown Created for Favorite Parisian Actress.

Original Model Was of Beige Gaberdine and Embroideries Worked in Self-Colored Silks and Wools.

This little gown was created for a favorite Parisian actress, who is going to Monte Carlo to give some "war charity" performances. The material of the original model, writes Idalia de Villiers, was beige gaberdine and the embroideries were worked in self-colored silks and wools. The smart collar was made of beaver fur, and the cuffs matched. This dress would look quite as well with collar and cuffs of velvet, or of the dress material embroidered.

At the same time it must be recorded that small fur collars are appearing on many of the new spring dresses and it is whispered that when the hot summer days are with us again we shall be bringing out such "summer furs" as beaver, fish, dyed rabbit and mole. This fashion of applying small pieces of fur to summer dresses is not at all extravagant. Fur lasts a long time and a well-cut collar may be worn with very many different dresses—those intended for evening use as well as day frocks.

Both Premet and Doeulillet are showing long straight lines this spring. Indeed this applies to most of our leading dressmakers, but chas Doeulillet it is specially in evidence. Some of his best models measure a bare yard and a half at the hem of the skirt and the tunics are so long, and cut so straight, that the general effect is wonderfully youthful.

Doeulillet remains faithful to the large and picturesque collar which he so successfully introduced two or three seasons ago. In some cases these col-

Short Garments Are Made Like Attenuated Dolmans.

Use Chiffon of New Egyptian Tissue Satin Lined or Trimmed With Fur and Embroidered Tulle.

Every letter from Paris lays stress upon the short wraps. They are made like attenuated dolmans. They are of chiffon, of the new glistening Egyptian tissue, of satin-lined or trimmed with fur and of embroidered tulle. They resemble elaborated scarves. Some of them tuck in at the waist line in the back and drop long in the front; others go over the front of the figure in surplice fashion, wrap around the waist and tie with a huge bow at the back.

They are worn in the afternoon even thick frocks; they are worn in the evening over half decollete frocks they have taken the place of many short, separate jackets for street wear, and they are seen at all performances in the theaters and the opera, as well as in the restaurants. They are not removed. They are intended as a half-concealing, half-revealing and altogether subtle and attractive garment.

A woman will come into a restaurant with a dull lavender gown of satin, beaded and cut out half low the neck, with the arms bare from inches below the shoulders, and the whole top of the figure and gown will be covered by a short, draped, shirred wrap with sleeves of cornflower blue tulle, the ends of which may be weighted with Chinese tassels in blue gold and yellow.

There are dolmans of black satin lined with fur, and others that have bands of kolinsky or ermine which form a collar and outline the leopold-shaped armholes that often serve without sleeves. And again, the fur or the Egyptian beaded embroidery or metallic tissue is used to hold in these short wraps at the waistline and to form a bow or tie at the side or the back.

The last word in fashion is the shopping bag with hat to match. The sketch shows an example of these. A huge shopping bag was developed in metal brocade, done in gold and black, was made on the order of a huge purse. The wide opening, bound with gold braid. The strong handles were of gold braid, too, and were fastened to the bag with gold braid rosettes. It was attractively lined with gold-colored silk. The hat to match made on military lines, was very smart with its erect brim—if brim one might call it—of the gold and black brocade.

The crown was soft and made of black velvet. A paradise spray added height and richness. This set was very striking, worn with a French blue satin coat with collar and cuffs of soft lustrous moleskin. The wide girdle was trimmed with narrow silk braid, and a bit of hand-embroidery, done in blue and gold, was used effectively on the waist.

and unobtrusive hair that a "close up" view is sometimes required in order to be sure that a certain chic frock is really of the bustle class, says a fashion writer in the Washington Star. The bustle is usually an arrangement of the drapery. Occasionally a big cash is tied at the back of a frock, with flaring ends and short loops, so that the desired flare is effected.

The dress shown in the sketch has plain front section, and back and sides drawn up to form the bustle. Above this in the back rises the neatly fitted bodice, with front closing surplice fashion over a vest of white satin, which buttons high at the neck and is finished with flaring points on either side. Buttons trim the sleeves.

The white vest must be easily detachable, so that it may always be kept fresh. Of course, the color scheme of the frock may be varied. One of the pretty tan or gray wool fabrics may be selected, with vest in bright contrasting color. For service and smartness, however, nothing better than the combination of blue and white can be found.

To make the frock six yards of serge or other material, 36 inches wide, and three-quarters of a yard of satin the same width will be required.

Gravitation.

Absolute proof that the gravitational attraction between masses of matter varies with changes in their electrical potential due to electrical changes upon them has been obtained by Dr. Francis E. Nipher in a year of experiments in the laboratory of Washington University, St. Louis. It is said that Dr. Nipher has succeeded in reversing the law of gravity.

lars are covered with short-haired fur. In others they are made of some supple material, such as suede, glove kid, camois leather, etc., and richly embroidered.

QUESTION OF THE BRASSIERE

Difficult to Determine Whether the Apparel Should Be Included Under Corset or Lingerie Head.

It is hard to know whether brassieres ought to be included under the general head of corsets or lingerie. It is true that they carry out and accentuate the best lines of the corset, and an intelligent corset saleswoman can always recommend a special brassiere to go with any style corset that you may choose.

Filet lace is used lavishly in some of the new brassieres. They are indeed far different than those of heavy linen—rather bulky and clumsy in appearance, however satisfactory in effect—that were introduced into the market when brassieres first came into fashion. It is now possible to get brassieres for evening wear, no matter how low the décolletage may be. Some are made with a deep V at the back, straps of lace over the shoulder and a round or V line at the front. Others are made without any shoulder straps, but are so cleverly cut that they give the necessary support to the figure.

Fine and Small Design Fabrics.

Fine and small design mark the thin fabrics of the spring. The violets which seem to be even softer and sheerer than they were last year are almost invariably printed in exceedingly small patterns. In fabrics as transparent as voile the small patterns are perhaps an advantage as they break the surface very effectively, and so appear less transparent.

Will Control Milk Sales.

Winnipeg is planning to control milk sales. The citizens consume approximately 12,000 gallons of milk a day, of which 6,000 is pasteurized and 6,000 raw.

VARIETY OF WRAPS

Short Garments Are Made Like Attenuated Dolmans.

See Chiffon of New Egyptian Tissue, Satin Lined or Trimmed With Fur and Embroidered Tulle.

Every letter from Paris lays stress upon the short wraps. They are made like attenuated dolmans. They are of chiffon, of the new glistening Egyptian tissue, of satin-lined or trimmed with fur and of embroidered tulle. They resemble elaborated scarfs. Some of them tuck in at the waistline in the back and drop long in the front; others go over the front of the gure in surplice fashion, wrap around the waist and tie with a huge bustle bow at the back.

They are worn in the afternoon over black frocks; they are worn in the evening over half decollete frocks; they have taken the place of many short, separate jackets for street wear, and they are seen at all the performances in the theaters and at the opera, as well as in the restaurants. They are not removed. They are intended as a half-concealing, self-revealing and altogether subtle and attractive garment.

A woman will come into a restaurant with a dull lavender gown of satin, beaded and cut out half low at the neck, with the arms bare from six inches below the shoulders, and the whole top of the figure and gown will be covered by a short, draped, shirred wrap with sleeves of cornflower blue silk, the ends of which may be weighted with Chinese tassels in black, gold and yellow.

There are dolmans of black satin lined with fur, and others that have bands of kolinsky or ermine which form a collar and outline the long, ear-shaped armholes that often serve without sleeves. And again and again, the fur or the Egyptian beaded embroidery or metallic tissue is used to hold in these short wraps at the waistline and to form a bow or ends at the side or the back.

HIGH COLLARS AT THE BACK

Indications Are That Paris Has Given Up Effort to Inflict Either High or Round-Neck-Line.

From the lovely lingerie blouses—and those of georgette crepe and chiffon as well—shown in the smart shops and worn in smart places, we may judge that Paris has almost given up her effort to inflict on the American woman either the high collar or the rather unbecoming round neck-line, according to a fashion correspondent. To be sure some of the very smartest new blouses have what is sometimes called the "line of decapitation," but many of the new blouses show a rather deep V-square, oval or round line in front with a little turnover collar at the back deftly harmonized with the front, a turnover that fits well up against the neck, almost touching the lower line of the hair. This line of collar, high at the back and low at the front, is, we all know, distinctly becoming to the American woman.

MAKES OLD CHAIR LOOK NEW

Pretty Covers Are Easy to Make by First Cutting Pattern From Newspaper and Fitting It Over Chair.

To well polish the wood and to provide a dainty cover for the seat of an old chair will make it look like a new one, and pretty covers are not difficult to make.

The one illustrated is of a very useful type, and can be tied in position in a moment. It is carried out in dark

Embroidered Chair Cover.

brown corded silk, and bound at the edges with narrow ribbon of the same color. It is lined with sateen, and tapes are sewn on at the corners where indicated.

The space enclosed in the dotted line should correspond in size with the surface of the seat of the chair, and the flaps should be large enough to entirely cover the sides. It is a good plan prior to cutting out the material to cut out a rough paper pattern from newspaper and fit it over the chair.

The design which appears upon the cover consists of blossoms worked in various shades of pale pink, separated with leaves worked in various shades of green.

Popular Sweaters.

It is predicted that the coming summer will again be a season of sweaters. There is such a great variety now that one cannot be really well dressed and own only one or two. They range from the short hand-knitted kind to the long silk and fiber silk ones, and in all colors. Sweaters may have sleeves or be sleeveless, and it is thought that they will eventually take the place of the slip-over sports blouse.

The Alberta Mines.

According to the figures for 1917, as compiled by J. T. Sterling, of the Mines Branch of the Department of Public Works, the total output of Alberta mines for the year was 4,863,414 tons, with 283 mines in operation. One copper mine was opened up on the main line of the C.P.R. west of Banff, and two shale mines are in operation at Rode Cliff, near Medicine Hat. The total output of lignite coal for the year was 2,637,829 tons; of bituminous, 2,206,868 tons; anthracite, 118,718 tons; and briquettes, 93,818 tons. There were also 31,630 tons of coke burned. The total output for 1916 was: Lignite, 2,172,801 tons; bituminous, 2,335,250 tons; anthracite, 140,544 tons; briquettes, 107,959 tons; coke, 41,950 tons. This is the first time that the output of lignite has not been greater than the bituminous. It shows a considerable increase in lignite and bituminous and a falling off in anthracite, briquettes and coke. The total number of men employed in Alberta in the lignite field during the year 1917 was 5,779, as compared with 5,060 in 1916; in bituminous, 3,746, as compared with 3,234 in 1916; and in the anthracite, 287 for 1917 and 305 in 1916. The total number of men employed for the year was 9,812 in 1917 and 8,599 in 1916.

WHILE AT WAR

Women Suffer at Home

Toronto, Ont.—"I consider Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription the very best of woman's tonics. I suffered a severe nervous breakdown. I could not sleep, was weak and tired all the time. I took the 'Prescription' and just a few bottles completely built me up and relieved me of my nervous condition. It is a good medicine and I am glad to recommend it.—Mrs. ALFRED SHEPPARD, 259 Seaton St.

Niagara Falls, Ont.—"I can safely say that 'Favorite Prescription' did me a lot of good. I at one time developed woman's trouble; my nerves were completely shattered, and I became weak. I had severe backache and pains in my side, extending down into my limbs. I doctored, but did not get relieved of my ailment and was down, and out when I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and it so completely cured me and restored me to health and strength that I was able to do all my own work and others besides. I do recommend 'Favorite Prescription' to weak and ailing women; they cannot get a better medicine."—Mrs. JOHN LOCKHART, 26 Terrace Ave.

Favorite Prescription is an invigorating, restorative tonic, a soothing and strengthening nerve and a positive remedy for the chronic weaknesses peculiar to women.

This old prescription of Dr. Pierce's is extracted from roots and herbs by means of pure glycerine and is a temperance remedy of 50 years' good standing. Send 10c for trial pkg. of tablets to Dr. V. M. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y., or Bridgeburg, Ont.

WEDDING AT CENTREVILLE.

On Wednesday afternoon, at 2 o'clock, at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Tait Centreville, Mr. and Mrs. Tait's eldest daughter, Miss Bernice, became the bride of Mr. Leroy Trull, of Toronto. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Farnsworth, in front of a bower of evergreens and wild flowers in the presence of a number of immediate relatives and friends of the bride and groom. Following the ceremony a short reception was held while the happy couple received their friends. After partaking of a buffet luncheon the young couple left on the next train for a short trip to Bracebridge and Barrie. They will reside in Toronto. There was an unusual number of useful and valuable presents, and among them a number of cheques and gifts of money. The bride, who was one of the most popular young ladies, will be missed from the neighborhood and a host of good wishes go with her to her new home. Among the guests from a distance were: Mr. and Mrs. Herman Winte Chatham; Mr. and Mrs. Almon Godanier, Toronto; Mrs. Trull, Bramanville, and Mr. and Mrs. G. Blewett, Napanee.

ADA WARD COMPLETELY CAPTI-VATES.
 Remarkable for the dramatic quality and literary distinction of her lecture, Miss Ada Ward last night, in the Westminster Church, thrilled an audience that filled the building.
 Very many people were turned away.
 In introducing Miss Ward, Rev. Dr.
 David Christie facetiously remarked that last week had seen two notable victories, the capture of Bagdad by General Maud and the capture of Winnipeg by Miss Ward. Miss Ward's lecture moved her hearers to laughter and to tears and was in every way
 most impressive.—Winnipeg Telegram.
 Miss Ward speaks in the Armouries
 on May 29th, in aid of the Red Cross Society.
